

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

LIST OF WORKS BY LORD MACAULAY.

THE HISTORY OF ENGLAND From the Accession of James the Second. By the Right Hon. Lord MACAULAY. Literary Edition.
in Five Volumes. 1 vol. 8vo. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND
From the Author's last Manuscript. With Notes of the Five Volumes, as they have been corrected; with Preface and Appendix. 4 vols. post 8vo. 4s.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS contributed to the Edinburgh Review. By the Right Honourable Lord MACAULAY.
Library Edition, being the Fourth 2 vols. 8vo. 40s.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS. The Edinburgh Review, reprinted in Two Volumes, with Preface and Appendix. 2 vols. 8vo. 40s. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS reprinted in the Edinburgh Review. An Edition in Volume for the Pocket. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS contributed to the Edinburgh Review. Another Edition, reprinted in 2 vols. 2 vols. 8vo. 40s. 1849 and 50.

LIST of Editions of LORD MACAULAY'S ESSAYS with a history of each separately, as far as in the Editors' power to ascertain —

First Edition	1.	First Edition, in the Family Magazine	1.
Second Edition	2.	Second Edition, in the Family Magazine	2.
Third Edition	3.	Third Edition, in the Family Magazine	3.
Fourth Edition	4.	Fourth Edition, in the Family Magazine	4.
Fifth Edition	5.	Fifth Edition, in the Family Magazine	5.
Sixth Edition	6.	Sixth Edition, in the Family Magazine	6.
Seventh Edition	7.	Seventh Edition, in the Family Magazine	7.
Eighth Edition	8.	Eighth Edition, in the Family Magazine	8.
Ninth Edition	9.	Ninth Edition, in the Family Magazine	9.
Tenth Edition	10.	Tenth Edition, in the Family Magazine	10.

MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS of Lord
MACAULAY, consisting of Contributions to Knight's Quarterly Magazine, Macmillan's Magazine, and included in his Library Edition.
Macmillan's Magazine 1 vol. 8vo. 18s. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S LAWS OF ANCIENT ROME.
With Notes and the Summa. Now printed, with a Volume from a Manuscript of the 15th Century. 2 vols. 8vo. 40s. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S LAWS OF ANCIENT ROME. By the Right Hon.
Lord MACAULAY. With Notes of the Summa, and from the Manuscript of the 15th Century. 2 vols. 8vo. 40s. 1849 and 50.

LORD MACAULAY'S ADDRESS IN PARLIAM.
ON THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s. 1849 and 50.

SPEECHES of the Right Hon. Lord MACAULAY.
in the House of Commons. 1 vol. 8vo. 18s. 1849 and 50.

London: LONGMAN, GREEN, AND CO., 15, ABchurch Lane, E.C. 4.

6000141660

1

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

VOL. VIII.

LONDON

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO.

NEW-STREET SQUARE

Engraved by J. G. Thompson from a portrait by J. G. Thompson

Thomas G. Cabington
1840

THE
HISTORY OF ENGLAND

FROM THE ACCESSION OF JAMES THE SECOND.

BY LORD MACAULAY.

VOLUME VIII.

EDITED BY HIS SISTER, LADY TREVELYAN.

WITH A MEMOIR OF LORD MACAULAY BY THE VERY REV.

THE DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S.

LONDON:
LONGMAN, GREEN, LONGMAN, AND ROBERTS.

1862.

226. f. 8.

MEMOIR
OF,
LORD MACAULAY

LORD MACAULAY.*

THE biography of Lord Macaulay belongs rather to the history of Literature than to that of Natural Philosophy: he takes his proper place among the statesmen, orators, poets, essayists, historians of England, not among her men of science. With a mind so active and wide-ranging, he could not but take deep interest in the progress and in the marvellous discoveries of modern science; but he was content to accept those results on the authority of others, and to dwell on their political and social consequences, rather than himself to follow out their slow and laborious processes, for which, indefatigable as he was, he had no time, probably no inclination. Yet the annals of the Royal Society, which has ever been proud to enrol among its members statesmen and men of letters of the highest eminence, cannot pass over in silence a name so illustrious as that of Lord Macaulay.

* This memoir was written at the request of the President (Sir B. Brodie) and some members of the Council, for the Annual Journal of the Royal Society. Should a more full and copious biography of Lord Macaulay, at any future time, be thought advisable, this brief sketch will at once cede its place. In the meantime, it may be acceptable to the readers of Lord Macaulay's works, who will be naturally desirous to know something of his public and his private life.

THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY was born October 25, 1800, at Rothley Temple in Leicestershire, the seat of his paternal uncle, Thomas Babington. His father, Zachary Macaulay, resided at Clapham, one of those earnest and zealous men who, with Mr. Wilberforce, led the way in the strong religious reaction which followed the French Revolution, and whom posterity will honour as among the earliest and most steady adversaries of the African Slave Trade, the advocates of the Emancipation of the Negroes in our Colonies. The perpetual agitation of such questions, involving the most sacred principles of human liberty, could not be without its effect on the precocious mind of the young Macaulay. Perhaps to his birth and training in that school he owed in some degree his command of biblical illustration, which, however, his strong sense and sober judgement always kept within the limits of serious and respectful reverence. Family traditions, happily only traditions, of his early promise, of his childish attempts at composition in prose and verse, were not likely to be lost among a strong religious party, bound together by common sympathies, and maintaining an active correspondence throughout the country. The fame of young Macaulay reached the ears of Hannah More, and, after receiving a visit from him, the High Priestess of the brotherhood, in an agreeable letter, still extant, uttered an oracle predictive of his future greatness. After a few years of instruction at a small school in Clapham, at the age of twelve he was placed under the care of the Rev. Mr. Preston, first at Shelford, afterwards near Buntingford, in the neighbourhood of Cambridge. Mr. Preston seems to have been a man of attainments and judgement. He must have taught the Latin and Greek authors extremely well, for under his instruction Macaulay became a sound and good scholar. He did more, he fostered that love for the great classical writers, without which all study is barren and without durable impression. He respected too that great maxim, that no one is so well taught as by himself. Having given or strengthened the impulse, he left the young scholar to his own insatiable avidity for learning, and for books of all kinds. The schoolboy sent an anonymous defence of novel reading to the serious journal of his father's friends, the "Christian Observer," which was inserted. This passion for novel reading adhered to him to the last; he swept the whole range, not only of English but of foreign fiction, not without great profit to the future historian. The higher tastes which he then imbibed were equally indelible; his admiration of the unrivalled writers of Greece and Rome grew deeper to the close of his life. Homer and Thucydides, and Tacitus, remained among his constant and familiar studies, and no doubt, without controlling him to servile imitation, exercised a powerful influence on his mode of composition and on his style. Among his father's friends holding the same religious opinions, was Isaac Milner, Dean of Carlisle, and Master of Queen's College, a man with a singular union of profound mathematical acquirements, strong evangelical views, and a peculiar broad humour. During his visits to Milner at Cambridge, Macaulay acquired that strong attachment to the University, which, like his other attachments, seemed to become more strong and fervent with the progress of years.

In his nineteenth year he began his residence at Trinity College, Cambridge. His career at Cambridge was not quite so brilliant as the sanguine expectations of his friends had foretold. He had a repugnance for mathematics, or rather he was under the jealous and absorbing spell of more congenial studies. That repugnance in after life was a subject of much regret; he fully recognised the importance, almost the necessity, of such studies for perfect education. Even his scholarship, probably far more extensive, wanted that exquisite polish and nicety acquired only at our great public schools, from which came his chief rivals. He carried away, however, the Craven Scholarship, two prizes for English verse, and finally, the object of his highest ambition, a Fellowship of Trinity College. On this success he dwelt to the close of his life with pride. It gratified two of his strongest feelings,—attachment to Cambridge, and the desire of some independent provision which should enable him to enter on his professional career. On the inestimable advantages of such fellowships to young men of high promise and ability but of scanty means, he always insisted with great earnestness, and deprecated any change in the academical system which should diminish the number of such foundations, held, as he would recount with his unfailing memory, by so many of our first public men.

The Law was the profession he chose; he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, February, 1826; he took chambers, he read, he joined the Northern Circuit. But literature was too strong for law. His legal studies were no doubt of infinite value; they were in truth indispensable for his historical writings, and were hereafter to bear fruit in a sphere which his wildest imagination could not anticipate. He had received, indeed, from the discerning judgment of Lord Lyndhurst, a Commissionership of Bankrupts, 1827. No doubt his Cambridge fame and general promise recommended him for that office. But it was to letters that he was to owe his first opening to public life. In letters he had begun with modest contributions to a magazine, "Knight's Quarterly," of no great circulation, but which was mainly supported by some of his Cambridge friends: in this appeared some of his finest ballads. On a sudden he broke out with an article on Milton in the "Edinburgh Review," which perhaps excited greater attention than any article which had ever appeared, not immediately connected with the politics of the day. Taking the field in the same pages with the brilliant copiousness of Jeffrey, the vigorous and caustic versatility of Brougham, the inimitable wit and drollery and sound sense of Sydney Smith, to say nothing of the writers in the rival "Quarterly Journal," the young reviewer had struck out his own path. In comprehensiveness of knowledge, in the originality and boldness of his views, in mastery over the whole history and the life of the eventful times of Milton, in variety and felicity of illustration, in vigour, fulness, and vivacity of style, he seemed to make an epoch and a revolution in review-writing. Up to this time, with some excellent exceptions, the articles in reviews had confined themselves to notices, more or less excursive, of new books, and to discussions of the political or polemic questions of the day. The article now aspired to be a full dissertation on the history of any great period, on the life of any great man of any time, on the writings, on the influence, on the merits of authors of the highest fame. From a review it became an historical, biographical, philosophical essay.

This paper was followed by others of equal, some perhaps of superior excellence, each opening a new view into the vast range of the author's reading, showing his boldness and independence of judgement, the wonderful stores of his memory, his prodigality, sometimes perhaps uncontrolled, of allusion, illustration, similitude. A young Whig, of high and blameless character, popular with his friends, with the reputation of oratorical power in the debating rooms at Cambridge (he delivered one speech in London, we believe, at an Anti-Slavery Meeting, which made some noise), and the acknowledged author of such articles in one of the two popular journals of the day, could not but command the attention, and awaken the hopes of his party. If ever there was a nobleman a patron of letters from a deep and genuine and discriminating love of letters, it was Lord Lansdowne. Lord Lansdowne offered a seat in Parliament to the author of the admirable articles in the "Edinburgh Review." On the acceptance of this offer there could be no hesitation; his political opinions were in the strictest unison with Lord Lansdowne's. Few public men have been so calmly, deliberately true to their first political opinions as Macaulay. Unquestionably, change of political opinions, on full unselfish conviction, according to change of circumstances, may be the noblest act of moral courage, especially in the face of obloquy and misrepresentation. The best men may become wiser as they grow older. But to this trial Macaulay was never subjected, he was never called upon to this effort of self-sacrifice. He was a liberal in the highest and widest sense; some may think that he carried these views too far, some not far enough. But during life he was unswerving, without vacillation. The line which he drew between constitutional liberty and democracy in his early speeches on Reform and on the Charter, was precisely the same with that which he drew late in life, in a remarkable letter on the prospects and probable destiny of the United States of America.

Four years after he had been called to the bar, in 1830, Macaulay was returned to Parliament for Calne. His public life had now commenced. That public life it may be convenient briefly to survey in its several phases, as statesman, orator, poet, essayist, historian. Such was his remarkable variety and versatility. Very few men, indeed, have achieved great things in such different kinds of excellence.

In Parliament he had too much wisdom, too much self-respect, too much respect for his auditory (an auditory just in the main but severe, sometimes capricious in its justice, and jealous above all even of merit, if obtrusive, importunate, or too self-confident), to thrust himself forward at once into the foremost ranks. Till the Reform Bill he was content to try his arms on rare occasions; he would not waste his power on desultory skirmishes and on trivial subjects. Upon that momentous question, the Reform of 1832, he first put forth his strength. But of his speeches hereafter. The reputation acquired during these debates secured him a seat in Parliament, independent even on generous and unexacting friendship; he was returned, December, 1832, for the wealthy and populous borough of Leeds, enfranchised by the Reform Bill. In the year 1834, a great, and no doubt unexpected change took place in his prospects, it might seem in his destination. In 1832 he had accepted the office of Secretary to the Board of Control. In his official capacity (in 1834) he made a speech on the renewal of the Indian Charter, a speech which may be read with no unfavourable comparison with Burke's most splendid orations. In breadth and comprehensiveness of view it may compete, in fulness and accuracy surpass, in richness of diction rival the renowned orator; of course, as the occasion was so different, it had nothing of the passion, the terrible picturesqueness, the vituperation; but it had calm statesmanship, and philosophical, or rather, perhaps, historical thought. This speech of itself might seem to designate him to the Government as a member of the New Council which was to legislate for India. The offer was made. The vast field of India was of itself likely to seize on his imagination; he might aspire to be the legislator, as Heber the religious missionary, of that wonderful realm. He had many friends, the family of Grant especially (the present Lord Glenelg was the President of the Board of Control), closely connected with India; how much he had read or thought on the subject, his papers on Clive and Hastings (written later) may, nevertheless, bear testimony. Still, no doubt, prudential motives, and those of no ungenerous prudence, influenced his determination. By a few years of economy, careful but not illiberal, he might make a provision for his future life (he was a man with no expensive or prodigal habits) which might place him above dependence either on the servitude of office, or the servitude of literary labour. There was another incentive — his family had never been affluent. He might add to the comforts and assist in the advancement of those to whom he was attached by the strongest domestic affections, a duty which he discharged with unsparing generosity. In India he took his seat as Member of the Council and as President of the Law Commission. It has been supposed, and indeed asserted, that this legislative mission was barren and without result; now, however, it is bearing its mature fruits. After much, perhaps inevitable, delay, and repeated revisions, the Indian Criminal Code, in the formation of which he took a leading part, and which he had enriched with most valuable explanatory notes, will, with some alterations, and those not substantial, from January next have the force of law throughout British India. Macaulay's share in this great work, especially his notes, is declared by those who have a right to judge on such subjects, to have placed his reputation as a jurist on a solid foundation. It is the first, and therefore the most important, of a series of operations upon the judicial system of India, which will have a great effect upon the state of society in that country; and will not be without influence upon the jurisprudence of England.

Soon after his return to England in 1838, in January 1840, he was elected by acclamation, representative of the city of Edinburgh; that seat he filled undisturbed till July 1847. He had already been named on the Privy Council, and had accepted the office of Secretary at War. He was Secretary at War, with a seat in the cabinet, about two years, from 1839 to 1841. On the return of his friends to power, he became, July 12, 1846, Paymaster of the Forces.

But throughout this period of his life the great inward struggle was going on within his mind between the ambition of public usefulness, of parliamentary and official distinction, and the love of letters, which will rarely brook a rival on the throne, the still higher ambition, as he thought, of adding some great work to the treasures of English thought and English literature. In the office at Whitehall or the Horse Guards, on the benches of the House of Commons, amid the applauses or admiring silence of the House, his heart was in his library, and among his books. He yearned for a place not so much among the great parliamentary leaders and the famous statesmen of the land, the Chathams, Burkes, Foxs, as among the immortal writers in verse and prose, the Miltons, Clarendons, Addisons, Gibbons. The auditory which he coveted was that vast expanding world throughout which the English language is spoken; the fame, that which will only die with the death of English letters. Throughout the whole time of his absence from England, on his voyage to India and on his return, in India, as far as leisure would allow, and during his parliamentary and official career, he was still with his indefatigable industry heaping up stores of knowledge, stores which could not overload his capacious and retentive memory,—memory, whose grasp and self-command seemed to expand with its accumulating treasures,—memory which disdained nothing as beneath it, and was never perplexed or burdened by its incalculable possessions. As a curious instance of his range and activity of reading, among the books which he took with him to India, were the many huge volumes of St. Chrysostom's works. Their still almost pure and harmonious Greek, and their importance in the history of religious opinion (always a subject of deep interest), carried him through a task which has been achieved by few professional theologians. As an illustration of his powers of memory, he has said, and he was a most unboastful man, that if Milton's great poem were lost, he thought that he could accurately commit to writing at least all the first books of Paradise Lost.

This life-long inward strife, which perhaps might have remained unreconciled till towards the close of his days, came to a sudden and unexpected issue. At the election in 1847, Macaulay was the rejected candidate for the city of Edinburgh. Nor can it be denied, though those who admire Macaulay will not admire him the less, that he was accessory to his own failure. The event turned on a religious question, in which Edinburgh, true to its old Scotch prejudices, adhered to the less liberal view. Macaulay could not be persuaded to humour, to temporise, even to conciliate. He took the loftiest tone, boldly, indignantly rebuked the voters for their narrow, in his estimation, discreditable bigotry. He felt, there can be no doubt, this blow at the time bitterly. He was perhaps not suited for, he had never before been tried in the rough and coarse work of the popular canvass and the hustings; he was distressed at the desertion or the lukewarmness of friends; he was ashamed, as he openly declared, of the disgrace which Edinburgh inflicted on herself. In a striking poem, recently published, in which are some of the finest stanzas in the language, he gave full vent to his feelings of indignation and sorrow. But at the same time, and in the same poem, he finds and expresses his lofty sense of consolation. The great debate was ended; he was released; he was emancipated from public, from parliamentary life. He might retire with dignity and honour to the undisturbed, undistracted cultivation of letters; henceforth his study was his scene of action; literary fame was to be the undivided mistress of his affections, his earthly exceeding great reward. Edinburgh made a few years afterwards noble amends by returning Macaulay (at the election in 1852) without solicitation, without expense, even without the usual flattery of a personal canvass; he had but to appear, to accept, and return thanks for his ovation. He sat for Edinburgh from July 1852 to 1856. But he sat without the trammels, without the least desire of office: he spoke rarely, but never without effect. In 1856, failing health compelled him to resign that honourable post. Some other honours, but honours which belonged to a man of letters, awaited him and courted his acceptance. He was Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow in 1848; Trustee of the British Museum, February 1847 (an office which he highly esteemed, and to which he attended with much assiduity, and with great public advantage); Fellow of the Royal Society, November 1849; Foreign Member of the French Academy, May 1857, and of the Prussian Order of Merit (1857); High Steward of Cambridge (1857). In the same year he was raised to the peerage, a tribute to his high and blameless character and transcendent literary distinction, and an act of royal favour, quite unexpected, but highly approved by all whose approbation was of real value.

So far our imperfect sketch has exhibited Lord Macaulay as a public man, as a jurist, and a statesman; some words must follow as to his rank as an orator. It is remarkable how rarely in this country the famous and commanding public speaker, either in parliament or even at the bar, and the great writer, have met in the same person. Bolingbroke,

Burke, and Macaulay (the unrivalled comedies of Sheridan, the State Papers and exquisite political satires of Canning are hardly in point) stand perhaps alone. If all the writings of Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Erskine, Peel, had been suppressed, the world would have suffered no great loss. Macaulay had no thought of resting his fame on his parliamentary speeches; he would willingly have left them to the rarely visited cemetery of the parliamentary history. He was placed under compulsion by the act of a piratical bookseller, who printed many of them (insinuating that he did so by authority) bristling with blunders, bad English, loose argument, errors and mistakes about events and persons, everything most abhorrent to Macaulay's taste and judgement. He was under the necessity of publishing a more trustworthy edition. We confess some gratitude for this bad act of the unprincipled Curll of our days, for some of these speeches appear to us oratorical compositions of the highest order. By all accounts Macaulay's delivery was far too rapid to be impressive; it wanted also variety and flexibility of intonation. Even the most practised reporters panted after him in vain; how much more the slower intellects of country gentlemen and the mass of the House! This, however, only heightens our astonishment that speeches so full, so profoundly meditated, yet with so much freedom, with no appearance of being got by heart, with such prodigality of illustration and allusion, should be poured forth with such unhesitating flow, with such bewildering quickness of utterance. To read them with delight and profit, we read them rather slowly; we can hardly conceive that they were spoken less deliberately. It may be questioned, and has been questioned, whether Macaulay was, or could have become, a masterly debater. This accomplishment, except in rare examples, is acquired only by long use and practice. When Macaulay entered the House, the first places were filled by men of established influence and much parliamentary training. Even if he had felt called upon to make himself more prominent, it may be doubted whether he could have sufficiently curbed his impetuous energy, or checked his torrent of words. He would have found it difficult to assume the stately, prudent, reserved, compressed reply; he might have torn his adversaries' arguments to shreds, but he would not have been content without a host of other arguments, and so would have destroyed the effect of his own confutation. Still it is remarkable that on two occasions a speech of Macaulay's actually turned the vote of the House, and carried the question (a very rare event) in his own way,—the debate on the Copyright Act, and the question of Judges holding seats in the House of Commons. Though he took his seat, Lord Macaulay never spoke in the House of Peers; he went down, we believe, more than once, with the intention of speaking, but some unexpected turn in the debate deprived him of his opportunity; his friends, who knew the feeble state of his health at that time, were almost rejoiced at their disappointment in not hearing him in that which would have been so congenial a field for his studied and matured eloquence.

As a poet the fame of Macaulay rests, with the exception of the stanzas above alluded to, and one or two small pieces, on his Ballads, his "Lays of Rome," his "Armada," his "Cavalier," and "Cromwellian," and his "Ivry," and "Moncontour." In other departments of poetry he might have been endangered by his affluence and prodigality; his prize poems, and some of his early writings betray the danger. But the essence of the ballad, of popular poetry (for which in all its forms, from the Prince of ballad writers, Homer, to the common street ballad, which he caught up instantaneously, and could repeat by the score, he had an absolute passion), is simplicity — simplicity not inconsistent with the utmost picturesqueness, with the richest word-painting. Its whole excellence is in rapidity of movement, short, sudden transition, sharp, emphatic touches of tenderness, or of the pathetic, in above all, life, unreposing, unflagging, vigorous, stirring life; with words enough but not an idle word, words which strike home to the heart, and rivet themselves on the memory; a cadence which enthralls and will not die away from the ear. The popularity of Macaulay's ballads is the best proof of their excellence; they have become the burden of a host of imitators. Popularity may be a bad test of some of the higher kinds of poetry. Dante, Milton, Shakespeare, to be fully appreciated, may require a thoughtful, refined, enlightened constituency; ballad poetry may be safely left to universal suffrage.

Even in his famous Essays Macaulay had not satisfied his own ambition, nor reached that place after which he aspired in English letters. He seemed disposed to leave them buried in the voluminous journal in which they had appeared. Here, however, it was the honest admiration of the public, not the base desire of a bookseller for gain, which suggested and indeed compelled their separate publication. America set the example: the first collection was made to gratify the laudable curiosity of those who are spreading our language and our literature over a continent to which our island is but a speck in the ocean. However flattering this homage, American editions are not to be implicitly depended upon, and are confined to their own use. It became necessary to answer the demand in England, and edition after edition has followed in rapid unexhausted succession. On these essays (not perhaps fitly so called, at least very unlike the short essays on religious, moral, social subjects, such as Bacon's, Cowley's, Addison's, Johnson's, Goldsmith's) we cannot of course speak at length. They are rather philosophical, or historical disquisitions, and are remarkable in the first place for their vast range and variety. Some grapple with the most profound questions, — the Baconian philosophy, the law of population against Mr. Sadler, and what is called the Utilitarian philosophy. This essay Macaulay himself, with noble moderation and self-respect, refused to include in his own selection, not because he was disposed to retract one argument, or to recede from the severity of his judgement on the opinions which he undertook to refute, but because he had not done justice to the high character of his adversary, the late Mr. Mill. Some belong to literary criticism, in which he delighted to mingle singularly acute and original observations on the biographies of distinguished authors, their place in society; and the articles on Dryden, the Comic Dramatists of Charles II., Temple, Addison, Johnson, Byron, are the most full, instructive, and amusing views of the literary life of their respective ages, as well as of their specific works. The greater number, however, and doubtless the most valuable of the essays, are those which belong to history; a few to the history of Europe, — Machiavelli, Ranke's Lives of the Popes, Frederick the Great, Mirabeau, Barrère. In these two last, his judgments on the acts and on the men of the French Revolution are very striking. But the chief and the most important are those on English History. This was manifestly the subject which he had thought on most profoundly, investigated with the greatest industry, and studied down to what we may call the very dregs and lees of our political and social and religious life. There is hardly an important period, at least in our later history, which has not passed under his review. With the justly honoured exception of Hallam's "Constitutional History," Macaulay usually dismisses his author with a few words of respect or contempt, and draws almost altogether on his own resources. So Burleigh gives us the reign of Elizabeth; Bacon that of James I.; Milton and Hampden, of Charles I. and the Republic; Temple (with Mackintosh's History), Charles II. and the Revolution; Horace Walpole, Chatham, Pitt, the Georges; Clive and Hastings, the rise of our Indian Empire. The variety of topics is almost as nothing to the variety of information on every topic; he seemed to have read everything, and to recollect all that he had read.

As to the style of these essays, of Macaulay's style in general, a few observations. It was eminently his own, but his own not by strange words, or strange collocation of words, by phrases of perpetual occurrence, or the straining after original and striking terms of expression. Its characteristics were vigour and animation, copiousness, clearness, above all, sound English, now a rare excellence. The vigour and life were unabating; perhaps in that conscious strength which cost no exertion he did not always gauge and measure the force of his own words. Those who studied the progress of his writing might perhaps see that the full stream, though it never stagnated, might at first overflow its banks; in later days it ran with a more direct undivided torrent. His copiousness had nothing tumid, diffuse, Asiatic; no ornament for the sake of ornament. As to its clearness, one may read a sentence of Macaulay twice, to judge of its full force, never to comprehend its meaning. His English was pure, both in idiom and in words, pure to fastidiousness; not that he discarded, or did not make free use of the plainest and most homely terms (he had a sovereign contempt for what is called the dignity of history, which would keep itself above the vulgar tongue), but every word must be genuine English, nothing that approached real vulgarity; nothing that had not the stamp of popular use, or the authority of sound English writers, nothing unfamiliar to the common ear.

The Essays, however, were but preparatory, subsidiary to the great history, which was the final aim, and the palmary ambition of Macaulay. On the function, on the proper rank, on the real province and use of history, he had meditated long and profoundly. His ideal of the perfect historian, such as he aspired to be, may be found in an Essay, somewhat too excursive, in the "Edinburgh Review," republished in the recent volumes. A perfect history, according to Macaulay, would combine the unity and order of the great classical historians, with the diversity and immense range of modern affairs. This was but one condition; the history would not be content with recording the wars and treaties, the revolutions and great constitutional changes, the lives of kings, statesmen, generals; it would embrace the manners, usages, social habits, letters, arts, the whole life of the nation. It would cease to be haughtily aristocratic; it would show the progress of the people in all its ranks and orders. There can be no doubt that, as to the actual life of certain periods, Shakespeare and Scott are more true and trustworthy historians than Hume or even Clarendon. Why should not romance surrender up the province which it had usurped? Why should not all this, which is after all the instructive, not to say amusing part of the annals of mankind, be set in a framework of historic truth, instead of a framework of fiction? If we would really know our ancestors, if we would really know mankind, and look to history for this knowledge, how can history, secluding itself in a kind of stately majesty, affect to disdain this most important part of her office? Nothing can be more clumsy than the devices to which the historian sometimes has recourse. It may be excusable in historic dissertations (the form which Hallam's works assumed), to have the book half text, half notes,—broken, fragmentary, without continuity. Hume and Robertson took refuge in appendices, in which they sum up, with unsatisfactory brevity, what they wanted skill to inweave into their narrative. Henry's history may be read as containing what Hume left out. If there is in notes much beyond citation of authorities, perhaps comparison of conflicting authorities (we may pardon in Gibbon something more), this can only show that the historian has an unworthy conception of his high art, or that he wants the real power and skill of an historian. But to this lofty view of the historian's functions who is equal? It required all Macaulay's indefatigable research. For the historian, the true historian, must not confine himself to the chronicles and annals, the public records, the state papers, the political correspondence of statesmen and ambassadors; he must search into, he must make himself familiar with the lowest, the most ephemeral, the most contemptible of the writings of the day. There is no trash which he must not digest; nothing so dull and wearisome that he must not wade through. Nor are books all; much is to be learned from observation; and Macaulay delighted in rambling over England, to visit the scenes of historic events, the residences of remarkable men: the siege of Derry was described from Derry and its neighbourhood; the exquisitely true and vivid epithets with which he paints the old Italian towns in his Roman ballads owe their life and reality to his travels in Italy. Finally, to order, dispose, work into a flowing and uninterrupted narrative, the whole of this matter demanded nothing less than his prodigious memory, ever at the command of his imagination; to arrange it without confusion, to distribute it according to the laws of historic perspective, to make it, in short, a history, as difficult to lay down as the most stirring and engrossing romance.

Alas! that all this matchless power and skill should end in a torso, — yet a torso if, as we fairly may, we take the Revolution and the reign of William III. as a whole, nearly complete in its stature, and in all its limbs! It is deeply to be lamented that Macaulay allowed himself to be called off by generous and grateful friendship to write the lives in the Encyclopædia. All of these, even that of Pitt (as far as it goes, a perfect biography), we would willingly sacrifice if we could fill up the few chasms in his history. And what would we not give for his Queen Anne? William III., to whom he first did justice, and not more than justice, when looked upon from a European, not from an English point of view, was a labour of love: but what would have been the more congenial age of Anne, in which he knew every one, the Queen and her Court, Harley, St. John, Swift, Pope, Arbuthnot, as if he had lived with them on the most intimate terms? That in the main Macaulay possessed the still higher qualities of an historian, truth and impartiality, we hesitate not to avow our opinion; of this posterity will judge, we quietly and confidently await its award. He spoke out too freely, too strongly, not to encounter some prejudices, some no doubt very honest political or religious feelings. He did not, perhaps, always nicely measure the strength of his own language; and he so abhorred meanness and dishonesty, that they appeared doubly mean and dishonest in men of great fame and high pretensions. As to Marlborough, we are content to place Mr. Hallam's even more condemnatory verdict by the side of Macaulay's; and Macaulay had not reached the brighter part of Marlborough's career; in the last volume that great man is already shaking off the slough of his baser life. Penn's double and conflicting character (assuredly no rare occurrence in history) must be viewed on all sides. In Pennsylvania, the wise, Christian legislator, worthy of all praise, he was, in England, a vain busy man, proud of his influence with the king, who found it his interest to flatter him, and unable to keep himself out of the miserable intrigues of that miserable court.

A few sentences on Macaulay's conversational powers, on his private life still fewer. There is a common impression that in society he was engrossing and overpowering. Every one has heard the witty saying of his old friend (no two men could appreciate each other more highly or more justly) about "flashes of silence." But in the quiet intercourse with the single friend, no great talker was more free, easy and genial, than Macaulay. There was the most equable interchange of thought; he listened with as much courtesy, as he spoke with gentle and pleasant persuasiveness. In a larger circle, such as he delighted to meet and assemble around him to the close of his life, a few chosen intimates, some accomplished ladies, foreigners of the highest distinction, who were eager to make his acquaintance, his manners were frank and open. In conversation in such a circle, a commanding voice, high animal spirits, unrivalled quickness of apprehension, a flow of language as rapid as inexhaustible, gave him perhaps a larger share, but a share which few were not delighted to yield up to him. His thoughts were like lightning, and clothed themselves at once in words. While other men were thinking what they should say, and how they should say it, Macaulay had said it all, and a great deal more. And the stores which his memory had at instantaneous command! A wide range of Greek and Latin history and literature, English, French, Italian, Spanish; of German he had not so full a stock, but he knew the best works of the best authors; Dutch he learned for the purpose of his History. With these came anecdote, touches of character, drollery, fun, excellent stories excellently told. The hearer often longed for Macaulay's memory to carry off what he heard in a single morning, in an after-dinner colloquy, or in a few hours in a country house.

Lord Macaulay was never married ; his strong domestic affections were chiefly centred in his sister, happily married to his friend Sir Charles Trevelyan, and her family. Her children were to him as his own, and cherished with almost parental tenderness. As a friend, he was singularly steadfast ; he was impatient of anything disparaging of one for whom he entertained sincere esteem. In the war of political life, he made, we believe, no lasting enemy ; he secured the unswerving attachment of his political friends, to whom he had been unswervingly true. No act inconsistent with the highest honour and integrity was ever whispered against him. In all his writings, however his opinions, so strongly uttered, may have given offence to men of different sentiments, no sentence has been impeached as jarring against the loftiest principles of honour, justice, pure morality, rational religion.

In early life he was robust and active ; and though his friends at a later period could not but perceive the progress of some mysterious malady (he was long harassed by a distressing cough), yet he rallied so frequently, and seemed to have so much buoyancy of constitution, that they hoped he might have life to achieve his great work. He himself felt inward monitions ; his ambition receded from the hope of reaching the close of the first Brunswicks ; before his last illness he had reduced his plan to the reign of Queen Anne.

His end, though not without warning to those who watched him with friendship and affection, was sudden and singularly quiet. On December 28, 1859, he fell asleep and woke not again.

He was buried, January 9, 1860, in Westminster

Abbey, in Poets' Corner, his favourite haunt; and he was known to have expressed a modest hope that he might be thought worthy to repose there with the illustrious dead. He lies at the foot of Addison's statue, near to Johnson, and among many other of our most famous statesmen and men of letters.

H. H. MILMAN.

PREFACE

TO

THE EIGHTH VOLUME.

I HAVE thought it right to publish that portion of the continuation of the "History of England" which was fairly transcribed and revised by Lord Macaulay. It is given to the world precisely as it was left : no connecting link has been added ; no reference verified ; no authority sought for or examined. It would indeed have been possible, with the help I might have obtained from his friends, to have supplied much that is wanting ; but I preferred, and I believe the public will prefer, that the last thoughts of the great mind passed away from among us should be preserved sacred from any touch but his own. Besides the revised manuscript, a few pages containing the first rough sketch of the last two months of William's reign are all that is left. From this I have with some difficulty deciphered the account of the death of William. No attempt has been made to join it on to the preceding part, or to supply the corrections which would have been given by the improving hand of the author. But, imperfect as it must be, I believe it will be received with pleasure and interest as a fit conclusion to the life of his great hero.

I will only add my grateful thanks for the kind advice and assistance given me by his most dear and valued friends, Dean Milman and Mr. Ellis.

H. M. T.

CONTENTS

OF

THE EIGHTH VOLUME.

CHAPTER XXIII.

	Page
Standing Armies - - - - -	1
Sunderland - - - - -	3
Lord Spencer - - - - -	4
Controversy touching Standing Armies - - - - -	7
Meeting of Parliament - - - - -	16
The King's Speech well received - - - - -	16
Debate on a Peace Establishment - - - - -	17
Sunderland attacked - - - - -	18
The Nation averse to a Standing Army - - - - -	22
Mutiny Act ; the Navy - - - - -	25
Acts concerning High Treason - - - - -	26
Earl of Clancarty - - - - -	28
Ways and Means - - - - -	31
Rights of the Sovereign in reference to Crown Lands - - - - -	32
Proceedings in Parliament on Grants of Crown Lands - - - - -	34
Montague accused of Peculation - - - - -	36
Bill of Pains and Penalties against Duncombe - - - - -	40
Dissension between the Houses - - - - -	48
Commercial Questions - - - - -	50
Irish Manufactures - - - - -	53
East India Companies - - - - -	59
Fire at Whitehall - - - - -	66
Visit of the Czar - - - - -	69
Portland's Embassy to France - - - - -	78
The Spanish Succession - - - - -	91
The Count of Tallard's Embassy - - - - -	107
Newmarket Meeting : the insecure State of the Roads - - - - -	110
Further Negotiations relating to the Spanish Succession - - - - -	112

	Page
The King goes to Holland - - - -	114
Portland returns from his Embassy - - -	116
William is reconciled to Marlborough - - -	117

CHAPTER XXIV.

Altered Position of the Ministry - - - -	120
The Elections - - - -	121
First Partition Treaty - - - -	128
Domestic Discontent - - - -	141
Littleton chosen Speaker - - - -	142
King's Speech - - - -	144
Proceedings relating to the Amount of the Land Force - - -	145
Unpopularity of Montague - - - -	152
Bill for Disbanding the Army - - - -	165
The King's Speech - - - -	166
Death of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria - - - -	168
Renewed Discussion of the Army Question - - - -	170
Naval Administration - - - -	176
Commission on Irish Forfeitures - - - -	178
Prorogation of Parliament - - - -	179
Changes in the Ministry and Household - - - -	180
Spanish Succession - - - -	185
Darien - - - -	195

CHAPTER XXV.

Trial of Spencer Cowper - - - -	229
Duels - - - -	234
Discontent of the Nation - - - -	236
Captain Kidd - - - -	239
Meeting of Parliament - - - -	246
Attacks on Burnet - - - -	249
Renewed Attack on Somers - - - -	251
Question of the Irish Forfeitures : Dispute between the Houses - - -	254
Somers again attacked - - - -	276
Prorogation of Parliament - - - -	279
Death of James the Second - - - -	280
The Pretender recognised as King - - - -	288
Return of the King - - - -	292
General Election - - - -	294
Death of William - - - -	298
INDEX - - - -	305

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE rejoicings, by which London, on the second of December 1697, celebrated the return of peace and prosperity, continued till long after midnight. On the following morning the Parliament met; and one of the most laborious sessions of that age commenced.

Among the questions which it was necessary that the Houses should speedily decide, one stood forth preeminent in interest and importance. Standing armies. Even in the first transports of joy with which the bearer of the treaty of Ryswick had been welcomed to England, men had eagerly and anxiously asked one another what was to be done with that army which had been famed in Ireland and Belgium, which had learned, in many hard campaigns, to obey and to conquer, and which now consisted of eighty-seven thousand excellent soldiers. Was any part of this great force to be retained in the service of the State? And, if any part, what part? The last two kings had, without the consent of the legislature, maintained military establishments in time of peace. But that they had done this in violation of the fundamental laws of England was acknowledged by all jurists, and had been expressly affirmed in the Bill of Rights. It was therefore impossible for William, now that the country was threatened by no foreign and no domestic enemy, to keep up even a single battalion without the sanction of the Estates of the Realm; and it might well be doubted whether such a sanction would be given.

It is not easy for us to see this question in the light in which it appeared to our ancestors.

No man of sense has, in our days, or in the days of our fathers, seriously maintained that our island could be safe without an army. And, even if our island were perfectly secure from attack, an army would still be indispensably necessary to us. The growth of the empire has left us no choice. The regions which we have colonized or conquered since the accession of the House of Hanover contain a population exceeding twenty-fold that which the House of Stuart governed. There are now more English soldiers on the other side of the tropic of Cancer in time of peace than Cromwell had under his command in time of war. All the troops of Charles II. would not have been sufficient to garrison the posts which we now occupy in the Mediterranean Sea alone. The regiments which defend the remote dependencies of the Crown cannot be duly recruited and relieved, unless a force far larger than that which James collected in the camp at Hounslow for the purpose of overawing his capital be constantly kept up within the kingdom. The old national antipathy to permanent military establishments, an antipathy which was once reasonable and salutary, but which lasted some time after it had become unreasonable and noxious, has gradually yielded to the irresistible force of circumstances. We have made the discovery, that an army may be so constituted as to be in the highest degree efficient against an enemy, and yet obsequious to the civil magistrate. We have long ceased to apprehend danger to law and to freedom from the licence of troops, and from the ambition of victorious generals. An alarmist who should now talk such language as was common five generations ago, who should call for the entire disbanding of the land force of the realm, and who should gravely predict that the warriors of Inkerman and Delhi would depose the Queen, dissolve the Parliament, and plunder the Bank, would be regarded as fit only for a cell in Saint Luke's. But before the Revolution our ancestors had known a standing army only as an instrument of lawless power. Judging by their own experience, they thought it impossible that such an army should exist without danger to the rights both of the Crown and of the people. One class of politicians was never weary of repeating that an Apostolic Church, a loyal gentry, an ancient nobility, a sainted King, had been foully outraged by the Joyces and the Prides: another class recounted the atrocities committed by the Lambs of Kirke, and by the Beelzebubs and Lucifers of Dundee; and both classes, agreeing in scarcely anything else, were disposed to agree in aversion to the red coats.

While such was the feeling of the nation, the King was, both as a statesman and as a general, most unwilling to see that superb body of troops which he had formed with infinite difficulty broken up and dispersed. But, as to this matter, he could not absolutely rely on the support of his ministers; nor could his ministers absolutely rely on the support of that parliamentary majority whose attachment had enabled them to confront enemies abroad and to crush traitors at home, to restore a debased currency, and to fix public credit on deep and solid foundations.

The difficulties of the King's situation are to be, in part at least, attributed to an error ^{Sunderland.} which he had committed in the preceding spring. The Gazette which announced that Sunderland had been appointed Chamberlain of the Royal

Household, sworn of the Privy Council, and named one of the Lords Justices who were to administer the government during the summer, had caused great uneasiness among plain men who remembered all the windings and doublings of his long career. In truth, his countrymen were unjust to him. For they thought him, not only an unprincipled and faithless politician, which he was, but a deadly enemy of the liberties of the nation, which he was not. What he wanted was simply to be safe, rich and great. To these objects he had been constant through all the vicissitudes of his life. For these objects he had passed from Church to Church and from faction to faction, had joined the most turbulent of oppositions without any zeal for freedom, and had served the most arbitrary of monarchs without any zeal for monarchy; had voted for the Exclusion Bill without being a Protestant, and had adored the Host without being a Papist; had sold his country at once to both the great parties which divided the Continent, had taken money from France, and had sent intelligence to Holland. As far, however, as he could be said to have any opinions, his opinions were Whiggish. Since his return from exile, his influence had been generally exerted in favour of the Whig party. It was by his counsel that the Great Seal had been entrusted to Somers, that Nottingham had been sacrificed to Russell, and that Montague had been preferred to Fox. It was by his dexterous management that the Princess Anne had been detached from the opposition, and that Godolphin had been removed from the head of the Board of Treasury. The party which Sunderland had done so much to serve now held a new pledge for his fidelity. His only son, Charles

Lord Spencer. Lord Spencer, was just entering on public life. The precocious maturity of the young man's intellectual and moral character had excited hopes which were not destined to be realized. His knowledge of ancient literature, and his skill in imitating the styles of the masters of Roman eloquence, were applauded by veteran scholars. The sedateness of his deportment and the apparent regularity of his life delighted austere moralists. He was known indeed to have one expensive taste; but it was a taste of the most respectable kind. He loved books, and was bent on forming the most magnificent private library in England. While other heirs of noble houses were inspecting patterns of steinkirks and sword knots, dangling after actresses, or betting on fighting cocks, he was in pursuit of the Mentz editions of Tully's Offices, of the Parmesan Statius, and of the inestimable Virgil of Zarottus.* It was natural that high expectations should be formed of the virtue and wisdom of a youth whose very luxury and prodigality had a grave and erudite air, and that even discerning men should be unable to detect the vices which were hidden under that show of premature sobriety.

Spencer was a Whig, unhappily for the Whig party, which, before the unhonoured and unlamented close of his life, was more than once brought to the verge of ruin by his violent temper and his crooked politics. His Whiggism differed widely from that of his father. It was not a languid, speculative, preference of one theory of government to another, but a fierce and dominant passion. Unfortunately, though an ardent, it was at the same time a corrupt and degenerate, Whiggism; a Whiggism so narrow and oligarchical as to be little, if at all, preferable to the worst forms of Toryism. The young lord's imagination had been fascinated by those swelling sentiments of liberty which abound in the Latin poets and orators; and he, like those poets and orators, meant by liberty something very different from the only liberty which is of importance to the happiness of mankind. Like them, he could see no danger to liberty except from kings. A commonwealth, oppressed and pillaged by such men as Opimius and Verres, was free, because it had no king. A member of the Grand Council of Venice, who passed his whole life under tutelage and in fear, who could not travel where he chose, or visit whom he chose, or invest his property as he chose, whose path was beset with spies, who saw at the corners of the streets the mouth of bronze gaping for anonymous accusations against him, and whom the Inquisitors of State could, at any moment, and for any or no reason, arrest, torture, fling into the Grand Canal, was free, because he had no king. To curtail, for the benefit of a small privileged class, prerogatives which the Sovereign possesses and ought to possess for the benefit of the whole nation, was the object on which Spencer's heart was set. During many years he was restrained by older and wiser men; and it was not till those whom he had early been accustomed to respect had passed away, and till he was himself at the head of affairs, that he openly attempted to obtain for the hereditary nobility a precarious and invidious ascendancy in the State, at the expense both of the Commons and of the Throne.

* Evelyn saw the Mentz edition of the Offices among Lord Spencer's books in April, 1699. Markland, in his preface to the Sylva of Statius, acknowledges his obligations to the very rare Parmesan edition in Lord Spencer's collection. As to the Virgil of Zarottus, which his Lordship bought for 46*l.*, see the extracts from Wanley's Diary, in Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, i. 90.

In 1695, Spencer had taken his seat in the House of Commons as member for Tiverton, and had, during two sessions, conducted himself as a steady and zealous Whig. The party to which he had attached himself might perhaps have reasonably considered him as a hostage sufficient to ensure the good faith of his father; for the Earl was approaching that time of life at which even the most ambitious and rapacious men generally toil rather for their children than for themselves. But the distrust which Sunderland inspired was such as no guarantee could quiet. Many fancied that he was, — with what object they never took the trouble to inquire, — employing the same arts which had ruined James for the purpose of ruining William. Each prince had had his weak side. One was too much a Papist, and the other too much a soldier, for such a nation as this. The same intriguing sycophant who had encouraged the Papist in one fatal error was now encouraging the soldier in another. It might well be apprehended that, under the influence of this evil counsellor, the nephew might alienate as many hearts by trying to make England a military country as the uncle had alienated by trying to make her a Roman Catholic country.

The parliamentary conflict on the great question of a standing army was preceded by a literary conflict. In the autumn of 1697 Controversy touching standing armies. began a controversy of no common interest and importance. The press was now free. An exciting and momentous political question could be fairly discussed. Those who held uncourtly opinions could express those opinions without resorting to illegal expedients and employing the agency of desperate men. The consequence was that the dispute was carried on, though with sufficient keenness, yet, on the whole, with a decency which would have been thought extraordinary in the days of the censorship.

On this occasion the Tories, though they felt strongly, wrote but little. The paper war was almost entirely carried on between two sections of the Whig party. The combatants on both sides were generally anonymous. But it was well known that one of the foremost champions of the malecontent Whigs was John Trenchard, son of the late Secretary of State. Preeminent among the ministerial Whigs was one in whom admirable vigour and quickness of intellect were united to a not less admirable moderation and urbanity, one who looked on the history of past ages with the eye of a practical statesman, and on the events which were passing before him with the eye of a philosophical historian. It was not necessary for him to name himself. He could be none but Somers.

The pamphleteers who recommended the immediate and entire disbanding of the army had an easy task. If they were embarrassed, it was only by the abundance of the matter from which they had to make their selection. On their side were claptraps and historical commonplaces without number, the authority of a crowd of illustrious names, all the prejudices, all the traditions, of both the parties in the state. These writers laid it down as a fundamental principle of political science that a standing army and a free constitution could not exist together. What, they asked, had destroyed the noble commonwealths of Greece? What had enslaved the mighty Roman people? What had turned the Italian republics of the middle ages into lordships and duchies? How was it that so many of the kingdoms of modern Europe had been transformed from limited into absolute monarchies? The States General of France, the Cortes of Castile, the Grand Justiciary of Arragon, what had been fatal to them all? History was ransacked for instances of adventurers who, by the help of mercenary troops, had subjugated free nations or deposed legitimate princes; and such instances were easily found. Much was said about Pisistratus, Timophanes, Dionysius, Agathocles, Marius and Sylla, Julius Cæsar and Augustus Cæsar, Carthage besieged by her own mercenaries, Rome put up to auction by her own Prætorian cohorts, Sultan Osman butchered by his own Janissaries, Lewis Sforza sold into captivity by his own Switzers. But the favourite instance was taken from the recent history of our own land. Thousands still living had seen the great usurper, who, strong in the power of the sword, had triumphed over both royalty and freedom. The Tories were reminded that his soldiers had guarded the scaffold before the Banqueting House. The Whigs were reminded that those same soldiers had taken the mace from the table of the House of Commons. From such evils, it was said, no country could be secure which was cursed with a standing army. And what were the advantages which could be set off against such evils? Invasion was the bugbear with which the Court tried to frighten the nation. But we were not children to be scared by nursery tales. We were at peace; and, even in time of war, an enemy who should attempt to invade us would probably be intercepted by our fleet, and would assuredly, if he reached our shores, be repelled by our militia. Some people indeed talked as if a militia could achieve nothing great. But that base doctrine was refuted by all ancient and all modern history. What was the Lacedæmonian phalanx in the best days of Lacedæmon? What was the Roman legion in the best days of Rome? What were the armies which conquered at Cressy, at Poitiers, at Agincourt, at Halidon, or at Flodden? What was that mighty array which Elizabeth reviewed at Tilbury? In the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries Englishmen who did not live by the trade of war had made war with success and glory. Were the English of the seventeenth century so degenerate that they could not be trusted to play the men for their own homesteads and parish churches?

For such reasons as these the disbanding of the forces was strongly recommended. Parliament, it was said, might perhaps, from respect and tenderness for the person of His Majesty, permit him to have guards enough to escort his coach and to pace the rounds before his palace. But this was the very utmost that it would be right to concede. The defence of the realm ought to be confided to the sailors and the militia. Even the Tower ought to have no garrison except the trainbands of the Tower Hamlets.

It must be evident to every intelligent and dispassionate man that these declaimers contradicted themselves. If an army composed of regular troops really was far more efficient than an army composed of husbandmen taken from the plough and burghers taken from the counter, how could the country be safe with no defenders but husbandmen and burghers, when a great prince, who was our nearest neighbour, who had a few months before been our enemy, and who might, in a few months, be our enemy again, kept up not less than a hundred and fifty thousand regular troops? If, on the other hand, the spirit of the English people was such that they would, with little or no training, encounter and defeat the most formidable array of veterans from the continent, was it not absurd to apprehend that such a people could be reduced to slavery by a few regiments of their own countrymen? But our ancestors were generally so much blinded by prejudice that this inconsistency passed unnoticed. They were secure where they ought to have been wary, and timorous where they might well have been secure. They were not shocked by hearing the same man maintain, in the same breath, that, if twenty thousand professional soldiers were kept up, the liberty and property of millions of Englishmen would be at the mercy of the Crown, and yet that those millions of Englishmen, fighting for liberty and property, would speedily annihilate an invading army composed of fifty or sixty thousand of the conquerors of Steinkirk and Landen. Whoever denied the former proposition was called a tool of the Court. Whoever denied the latter was accused of insulting and slandering the nation.

Somers was too wise to oppose himself directly to the strong current of popular feeling. With rare dexterity he took the tone, not of an advocate, but of a judge. The danger which seemed so terrible to many honest friends of liberty he did not venture to pronounce altogether visionary. But he reminded his countrymen that a choice between dangers was sometimes all that was left to the wisest of mankind. No lawgiver had ever been able to devise a perfect and immortal form of government. Perils lay thick on the right and on the left; and to keep far from one evil was to draw near to another. That which, considered merely with reference to the internal polity of England, might be, to a certain extent, objectionable, might be absolutely essential to her rank among European Powers, and even to her independence. All that a statesman could do in such a case was to weigh inconveniences against each other, and carefully to observe which way the scale leaned. The evil of having regular soldiers, and the evil of not having them, Somers set forth and compared in a little treatise, which was once widely renowned as the Balancing Letter, and which was admitted, even by the malecontents, to be an able and plausible composition. He well knew that mere names exercise a mighty influence on the public mind; that the most perfect tribunal which a legislator could construct would be unpopular if it were called the Star Chamber; that the most judicious tax which a financier could devise would excite murmurs if it were called the Shipmoney; and that the words Standing Army then had to English ears a sound as unpleasing as either Shipmoney or Star Chamber. He declared therefore that he abhorred the thought of a standing army. What he recommended was, not a standing, but a temporary army, an army of which Parliament would annually fix the number, an army for which Parliament would annually frame a military code, an army which would cease to exist as soon as either the Lords or the Commons should think that its services were not needed. From such an army surely the danger to public liberty could not by wise men be thought serious. On the other hand, the danger to which the kingdom would be exposed if all the troops were disbanded was such as might well disturb the firmest mind. Suppose a war with the greatest Power in Christendom to break out suddenly, and to find us without one battalion of regular infantry, without one squadron of regular cavalry; what disasters might we not reasonably apprehend? It was idle to say that a descent could not take place without ample notice, and that we should have time to raise and discipline a great force. An absolute prince, whose orders, given in profound secrecy, were promptly obeyed at once by his captains on the Rhine and on the Scheld, and by his admirals in the Bay of Biscay and in the Mediterranean, might be ready to strike a blow long before we were prepared to parry it. We might be appalled by learning that ships from widely remote parts, and troops from widely remote garrisons, had assembled at a single point within sight of our coast. To trust to our fleet was to trust to the winds and the waves. The breeze which was favourable to the invader might prevent our men of war from standing out to sea. Only nine years ago this had actually happened. The Protestant wind, before which the Dutch armament had run full sail down the Channel, had driven King James's navy back into the Thames. It must then be acknowledged to be not improbable that the enemy might land. And, if he landed, what would he find? An open country; a rich country; provisions everywhere; not a river but which could be forded; no natural fastnesses such as protect the fertile plains of Italy; no artificial fastnesses such as, at every step, impede the progress of a conqueror in the Netherlands. Everything must then be staked on the steadiness of the militia; and it was pernicious flattery to represent the militia as equal to a conflict in the field with veterans whose whole life had been a preparation for the day of battle. The instances which it was the fashion to cite of the great achievements of soldiers taken from the threshing floor and the shop-board were fit only for a school-boy's theme. Somers, who had studied ancient literature like a man, — a rare thing in his time, — said that those instances refuted the doctrine which they were meant to prove. He disposed of much idle declamation about the Lacedæmonians by saying, most concisely, correctly, and happily, that the Lacedæmonian commonwealth really was a standing army which threatened all the rest of Greece. In fact, the Spartan had no calling except war. Of arts, sciences, and letters he was ignorant. The labour of the spade and of the loom, and the petty gains of trade, he contemptuously abandoned to men of a lower caste. His whole existence from childhood to old age was one long military training. Meanwhile the Athenian, the Corinthian, the Argive, the Theban, gave his chief attention to his oliveyard or his vineyard, his warehouse or his workshop, and took up his shield and spear only for short terms and at long intervals. The difference therefore between a Lacedæmonian phalanx and any other phalanx was long as great as the difference between a regiment of the French household troops and a regiment of the London trainbands. Lacedæmon consequently continued to be dominant in Greece till other states began to employ regular troops. Then her supremacy was at an end. She was great while she was a standing army among militias. She fell when she had to contend with other standing armies. The lesson which is really to be learned from her ascendancy and from her decline is this, that the occasional soldier is no match for the professional soldier.*

* The more minutely we examine the history of the decline and fall of Lacedæmon, the more reason we shall find to admire

The same lesson Somers drew from the history of Rome; and every scholar who really understands that history will admit that he was in the right. The finest militia that ever existed was probably that of Italy in the third century before Christ. It might have been the sagacity of Somers. The first great humiliation which befel the Lacedæmonians was the affair of Sphacteria. It is remarkable that on this occasion they were vanquished by men who made a trade of war. The force which Cleon carried out with him from Athens to the Bay of Pylos, and to which the event of the conflict is to be chiefly ascribed, consisted entirely of mercenaries, — archers from Scythia and light infantry from Thrace. The victory gained by the Lacedæmonians over a great confederate army at Tegea retrieved that military reputation which the disaster of Sphacteria had impaired. Yet even at Tegea it was signally proved that the Lacedæmonians, though far superior to occasional soldiers, were not equal to professional soldiers. On every point but one the allies were put to rout; but on one point the Lacedæmonians gave way; and that was the point where they were opposed to a brigade of a thousand Argives, picked men, whom the state to which they belonged had during many years trained to war at the public charge, and who were, in fact, a standing army. After the battle of Tegea, many years elapsed before the Lacedæmonians sustained a defeat. At length a calamity befel them which astonished all their neighbours. A division of the army of Agesilaus was cut off and destroyed almost to a man; and this exploit, which seemed almost portentous to the Greeks of that age, was achieved by Iphicrates, at the head of a body of mercenary light infantry. But it was from the day of Leuctra that the fall of Sparta became rapid and violent. Some time before that day the Thebans had resolved to follow the example which had been set many years before by the Argives. Some hundreds of athletic youths, carefully selected, were set apart, under the names of the City Band and the Sacred Band, to form a standing army. Their business was war. They encamped in the citadel; they were supported at the expense of the community; and they became, under assiduous training, the first soldiers in Greece. They were constantly victorious till they were opposed to Philip's admirably disciplined phalanx at Chæronea; and even at Chæronea they were not defeated, but slain in their ranks, fighting to the last. It was this band, directed by the skill of great captains, which gave the decisive blow to the Lacedæmonian power. It is to be observed that there was no degeneracy among the Lacedæmonians. Even down to the time of Pyrrhus they seem to have been in all military qualities equal to their ancestors who conquered at Platea. But their ancestors at Platea had not such enemies to encounter.

thought that seven or eight hundred thousand fighting men, who assuredly wanted neither natural courage nor public spirit, would have been able to protect their own hearths and altars against an invader. An invader came, bringing with him an army small and exhausted by a march over the snows of the Alps, but familiar with battles and sieges. At the head of this army he traversed the peninsula to and fro, gained a succession of victories against immense numerical odds, slaughtered the hardy youth of Latium like sheep, by tens of thousands, encamped under the walls of Rome, continued during sixteen years to maintain himself in a hostile country, and was never dislodged till he had by a cruel discipline gradually taught his adversaries how to resist him.

It was idle to repeat the names of great battles won, in the middle ages, by men who did not make war their chief calling; those battles proved only that one militia might beat another, and not that a militia could beat a regular army. As idle was it to declaim about the camp at Tilbury. We had indeed reason to be proud of the spirit which all classes of Englishmen, gentlemen and yeomen, peasants and burgesses, had so signally displayed in the great crisis of 1588. But we had also reason to be thankful that, with all their spirit, they were not brought face to face with the Spanish battalions. Somers related an anecdote, well worthy to be remembered, which had been preserved by tradition in the noble house of De Vere. One of the most illustrious men of that house, a captain who had acquired much experience and much fame in the Netherlands, had, in the crisis of peril, been summoned back to England by Elizabeth, and rode with her through the endless ranks of shouting pikemen. She asked him what he thought of the army. "It is," he said, "a brave army." There was something in his tone or manner which showed that he meant more than his words expressed. The Queen insisted on his speaking out. "Madam," he said, "Your Grace's army is brave indeed. I have not in the world the name of a coward; and yet I am the greatest coward here. All these fine fellows are praying that the enemy may land, and that there may be a battle; and I, who know that enemy well, cannot think of such a battle without dismay." De Vere was doubtless in the right. The Duke of Parma, indeed, would not have subjected our country; but it is by no means improbable that, if he had effected a landing, the island would have been the theatre of a war greatly resembling that which Hannibal waged in Italy, and that the invaders would not have been driven out till many cities had been sacked, till many counties had been wasted, and till multitudes of our stout-hearted rustics and artisans had perished in the carnage of days not less terrible than those of Thrasymene and Cannæ.

While the pamphlets of Trenchard and Somers were in every hand, the Parliament met.

The words with which the King opened the session brought the great question to a speedy issue. "The circumstances," he said, "of affairs abroad are such, that I think myself obliged to tell you my opinion, that, for the present, England cannot be safe without a land force; and I hope we shall not give those that mean us ill the opportunity of effecting that under the notion of a peace which they could not bring to pass by war."

The speech was well received; for that Parliament was thoroughly well affected to the Government. The members had, like the rest of the community, been put into good humour by the return of peace and by the revival of trade. They were indeed still under the influence of the feelings of the preceding day; and they had still in their ears the thanksgiving sermons and thanksgiving anthems: all the bonfires had hardly burned out; and the rows of lamps and candles had hardly been taken down. Many, therefore, who did not assent to all that the King had said, joined in a loud hum of approbation when he concluded.* As soon as the Commons had retired to their own chamber, they resolved to present an address assuring His Majesty that they would stand by him in peace as firmly as they had stood by him in war. Seymour, who had, during the autumn, been going from shire to shire, for the purpose of inflaming the country gentlemen against the ministry, ventured to make some uncourtly remarks: but he gave so much offence that he was hissed down, and did not venture to demand a division.†

Meeting of Parliament.

The King's speech well received.

The friends of the Government were greatly elated by the proceedings of this day. During the following week hopes were entertained that the Parliament might be induced to vote a peace establishment of thirty thousand men. But these hopes were delusive. The hum with which William's speech had been received, and the hiss which had drowned the voice of Seymour, had been misunderstood. The Commons were indeed warmly attached to the King's person and government, and quick to resent any disrespectful mention of his name. But the members who were disposed to let him have even half as many troops as he thought necessary were a minority. On the tenth of December his speech was considered in a Committee of the whole House; and Harley came forward as the chief of the opposition. He did not, like some hot headed men, among both the Whigs and the Tories, contend that there ought to be no regular soldiers. But he maintained that it was unnecessary to keep up, after the peace of Ryswick, a larger force than had been kept up after the peace of Nimeguen. He moved, therefore, that the military establishment should be reduced to what it had been in the year 1680. The Ministers found that, on this occasion, neither their honest nor their dishonest supporters could be trusted. For, in the minds of the most respectable men, the prejudice against standing armies was of too long growth and too deep root to be at once removed; and those means by which the Court might, at another time, have secured the help of venal politicians were, at that moment, of less avail than usual. The Triennial Act was beginning to produce its effects. A general election was at hand. Every member who had constituents was desirous to please them; and it was certain that no member would please his constituents by voting for a standing army: and the resolution moved by Harley was strongly supported by Howe, was carried, was reported to the House on the following day, and, after a debate in which several orators made a great display of their knowledge of ancient and modern history, was confirmed by one hundred and eighty five votes to one hundred and forty eight.*

* L'Hermitage, Dec. 13, 17, † Commons' Journal, Dec. 3, 1697. L'Hermitage, Dec. 17.

In this debate the fear and hatred with which many of the best friends of the Government regarded Sunderland were unequivocally manifested. "It is easy," such was the language of several members, "it is easy to guess by whom that unhappy sentence was inserted in the speech from the Throne. No person well acquainted with the disastrous and disgraceful history of the last two reigns can doubt who the minister is, who is now whispering evil counsel in the ear of a third master." The Chamberlain, thus fiercely attacked, was very feebly defended. There was indeed in the House of Commons a small knot of his creatures; and they were men not destitute of a certain kind of ability; but their moral character was as bad as his. One of them was the late Secretary of the Treasury, Guy, who had been turned out of his place for corruption. Another was the late Speaker, Trevor, who had, from the chair, put the question whether he was or was not a rogue, and had been forced to pronounce that the Ayes had it. A third was Charles Duncombe, long the greatest goldsmith of Lombard Street, and now one of the greatest landowners of the North Riding of Yorkshire. Possessed of a private fortune equal to that of any duke, he had not thought it beneath him to accept the place of Cashier of the Excise, and had perfectly understood how to make that place lucrative: but he had recently been ejected from office by Montague, who thought, with good reason, that he was not a man to be trusted. Such advocates as Trevor, Guy and Duncombe could do little for Sunderland in debate. The statesmen of the Junto would do nothing for him. They had undoubtedly owed much to him. His influence, co-operating with their own great abilities and with the force of circumstances, had induced the King to commit the direction of the internal administration of the realm to a Whig Cabinet. But the distrust which the old traitor and apostate inspired was not to be overcome. The ministers could not be sure that he was not, while smiling on them, whispering in confidential tones to them, pouring out, as it might seem, all his heart to them, really calumniating them in the closet or suggesting to the opposition some ingenious mode of attacking them. They had very recently been thwarted by him. They were bent on making Wharton a Secretary of State, and had therefore looked forward with impatience to the retirement of Trumball, who was indeed hardly equal to the duties of his great place. To their surprise and mortification they learned, on the eve of the meeting of Parliament, that Trumball had suddenly resigned, and Vernon, the Under Secretary, had been summoned to Kensington, and had returned thence with the seals. Vernon was a zealous Whig, and not personally unacceptable to the chiefs of his party. But the Lord Chancellor, the First Lord of the Treasury, and the First Lord of the Admiralty, might not unnaturally think it strange that a post of the highest importance should have been filled up in opposition to their known wishes, and with a haste and a secrecy which plainly showed that the King did not wish to be annoyed by their remonstrances. The Lord Chamberlain pretended that he had done all in his power to serve Wharton. But the Whig chiefs were not men to be duped by the professions of so notorious a liar. Montague bitterly described him as a fireship, dangerous at best, but on the whole most dangerous as a consort, and least dangerous when showing hostile colours. Smith, who was the most efficient of Montague's lieutenants, both in the Treasury and in the Parliament, cordially sympathised with his leader. Sunderland was therefore left undefended. His enemies became bolder and more vehement every day. Sir Thomas Dyke, member for Grinstead, and Lord Norris, son of the Earl of Abingdon, talked of moving an address requesting the King to banish for ever from the Court and the Council that evil adviser who had misled His Majesty's royal uncles, had betrayed the liberties of the people, and had abjured the Protestant religion.

* L'Hermitage, Dec. 10, Dec. 11, Journals.

Sunderland had been uneasy from the first moment at which his name had been mentioned in the House of Commons. He was now in an agony of terror. The whole enigma of his life, an enigma of which many unsatisfactory and some absurd explanations have been propounded, is at once solved if we consider him as a man insatiably greedy of wealth and power, and yet nervously apprehensive of danger. He rushed with ravenous eagerness at every bait which was offered to his cupidity. But any ominous shadow, any threatening murmur, sufficed to stop him in his full career, and to make him change his course or bury himself in a hiding place. He ought to have thought himself fortunate indeed, when, after all the crimes which he had committed, he found himself again enjoying his picture gallery and his woods at Althorpe, sitting in the House of Lords, admitted to the royal closet, pensioned from the Privy Purse, consulted about the most important affairs of state. But his ambition and avarice would not suffer him to rest till he held a high and lucrative office, till he was a regent of the kingdom. The consequence was, as might have been expected, a violent clamour; and that clamour he had not the spirit to face.

His friends assured him that the threatened address would not be carried. Perhaps a hundred and sixty members might vote for it; but hardly more. "A hundred and sixty!" he cried: "No minister can stand against a hundred and sixty. I am sure that I will not try." It must be remembered that a hundred and sixty votes in a House of five hundred and thirteen members would correspond to more than two hundred votes in the present House of Commons; a very formidable minority on the unfavourable side of a question deeply affecting the personal character of a public man. William, unwilling to part with a servant whom he knew to be unprincipled, but whom he did not consider as more unprincipled than many other English politicians, and in whom he had found much of a very useful sort of knowledge, and of a very useful sort of ability, tried to induce the ministry to come to the rescue. It was particularly important to sooth Wharton, who had been exasperated by his recent disappointment, and had probably exasperated the other members of the Junto. He was sent for to the palace. The King himself intreated him to be reconciled to the Lord Chamberlain, and to prevail on the Whig leaders in the Lower House to oppose any motion which Dyke or Norris might make. Wharton answered in a manner which made it clear that from him no help was to be expected. Sunderland's terrors now became insupportable. He had requested some of his friends to come to his house that he might consult them; they came at the appointed hour, but found that he had gone to Kensington, and had left word that he should soon be back. When he joined them, they observed that he had not the gold key which is the badge of the Lord Chamberlain, and asked where it was. "At Kensington," answered Sunderland. They found that he had tendered his resignation, and that it had been, after a long struggle, accepted. They blamed his haste, and told him that, since he had summoned them to advise him on that day, he might at least have waited till the morrow. "To-morrow," he exclaimed, "would have ruined me. To-night has saved me."

Meanwhile, both the disciples of Somers and the disciples of Trenchard were grumbling at Harley's resolution. The disciples of Somers maintained that, if it was right to have an army at all, it must be right to have an efficient army. The disciples of Trenchard complained that a great principle had been shamefully given up. On the vital issue, Standing Army or no Standing Army, the Commons had pronounced an erroneous, a fatal decision. Whether that army should consist of five regiments or of fifteen was hardly worth debating. The great dyke which kept out arbitrary power had been broken. It was idle to say that the breach was narrow; for it would soon be widened by the flood which would rush in. The war of pamphlets raged more fiercely than ever. At the same time alarming symptoms began to appear among the men of the sword. They saw themselves every day described in print as the scum of society, as mortal enemies of the liberties of their country. Was it reasonable,—such was the language of some scribblers,—that an honest gentleman should pay a heavy land tax, in order to support in idleness and luxury a set of fellows who requited him by seducing his dairy maids and shooting his partridges? Nor was it only in Grub Street tracts that such reflections were to be found. It was known all over the town that uncivil things had been said of the military profession in the House of Commons, and that Jack Howe, in particular, had, on this subject, given the rein to his wit and to his ill-nature. Some rough and daring veterans, marked with the scars of Steinkirk and singed with the smoke of Namur, threatened vengeance for these insults. The writers and speakers who had taken the greatest liberties went in constant fear of being accosted by fierce-looking captains, and required to make an immediate choice between fighting and being caned. One gentleman, who had made himself conspicuous by the severity of his language, went about with pistols in his pockets. Howe, whose courage was not proportionate to his malignity and petulance, was so much frightened, that he retired into the country. The King, well aware that a single blow given, at that critical conjuncture, by a soldier to a member of Parliament might produce disastrous consequences, ordered the officers of the army to their quarters, and, by the vigorous exertion of his authority and influence, succeeded in preventing all outrage.*

The nation
averse to a standing army.

* In the first act of Farquhar's Trip to the Jubilee, the passions which about this time agitated society are exhibited with much spirit. Alderman Smuggler sees Colonel Standard, and exclaims, "There's another plague of the nation, a red coat and feather." "I'm disbanded," says the Colonel.

"This very morning, in Hyde Park, my brave regiment, a thousand men that looked like lions yesterday, were scattered and looked as poor and simple as the herd of deer that grazed beside them." "Fal al deral!" cries the Alderman: "I'll have a bonfire this night, as high as the

All this time the feeling in favour of a regular force seemed to be growing in the House of Commons. The resignation of Sunderland had put many honest gentlemen in good humour. The Whig leaders exerted themselves to rally their followers, held meetings at the "Rose," and represented strongly the dangers to which the country would be exposed, if defended only by a militia. The opposition asserted that neither bribes nor promises were spared: The ministers at length flattered themselves that Harley's resolution might be rescinded. On the eighth of January they again tried their strength, and were again defeated, though by a smaller majority than before. A hundred and sixty four members divided with them. A hundred and eighty eight were for adhering to the vote of the eleventh of December. It was remarked that on this occasion the naval men, with Rooke at their head, voted against the Government.*

It was necessary to yield. All that remained was to put on the words of the resolution of the eleventh of December the most favourable sense that they could be made to bear. They did indeed admit of very different interpretations. The force which was actually in England in 1680 hardly amounted to five thousand men. But the garrison of Tangier and the regiments in the pay of the Batavian federation, which, as they were available for the defence of England against a foreign or domestic enemy, might be said to be in some sort part of the English army, amounted to at least five thousand more. The construction which the ministers put on the resolution of the eleventh of December was, that the army was to consist of ten thousand men; and in this construction the House acquiesced. It was not held to be necesmonument." "A bonfire!" answered the soldier; "thou dry, withered, ill-nature! had not those brave fellows' swords defended you, your house had been a bonfire ere this about your ears."

* L'Hermitage, January 11.

sary that the Parliament should, as in our time, fix the amount of the land force. The Commons thought that they sufficiently limited the number of soldiers by limiting the sum which was to be expended in maintaining soldiers. What that sum should be was a question which raised much debate. Harley was unwilling to give more than three hundred thousand pounds. Montague struggled for four hundred thousand. The general sense of the House was that Harley offered too little, and that Montague demanded too much. At last, on the fourteenth of January, a vote was taken for three hundred and fifty thousand pounds. Four days later the House resolved to grant half-pay to the disbanded officers till they should be otherwise provided for. The half-pay was meant to be a retainer as well as a reward. The effect of this important vote therefore was that, whenever a new war should break out, the nation would be able to command the services of many gentlemen of great military experience. The ministry afterwards succeeded in obtaining, much against the will of a portion of the opposition, a separate vote for three thousand marines.

A Mutiny Act, which had been passed in 1697, expired in the spring of 1698. As yet no such Act had been passed except in time Mutiny Act. of war; and the temper of the Parliament and of the nation was such that the ministers did not venture to ask, in time of peace, for a renewal of powers unknown to the constitution. For the present, therefore, the soldier was again, as in the times which preceded the Revolution, subject to exactly the same law which governed the citizen.

It was only in matters relating to the army that the government found the Commons unmanageable. Liberal provision was made The Navy. for the navy. The number of seamen was fixed at ten thousand, a great force, according to the notions of that age, for a time of peace. The funds assigned some years before for the support of the civil list had fallen short of the estimate. It was resolved that a new arrangement should be made, and that a certain income should be settled on the King. The amount was fixed, by an unanimous vote, at seven hundred thousand pounds; and the Commons declared that, by making this ample provision for his comfort and dignity, they meant to express their sense of the great things which he had done for the country. It is probable, however, that so large a sum would not have been given without debates and divisions, had it not been understood that he meant to take on himself the charge of the Duke of Gloucester's establishment, and that he would in all probability have to pay fifty thousand pounds a year to Mary of Modena. The Tories were unwilling to disoblige the Princess of Denmark; and the Jacobites abstained from offering any opposition to a grant in the benefit of which they hoped that the banished family would participate.

It was not merely by pecuniary liberality that the Parliament testified attachment to the Sovereign. A bill was rapidly passed which withheld the benefit of the Habeas Corpus Act, during twelve months more, from Bernardi and some other conspirators who had been concerned in the Assassination Plot, but whose guilt, though demonstrated to the conviction of every reasonable man, could not be proved by two witnesses. At the same time new securities were provided against a new danger which threatened the government. The peace had put an end to the apprehension that the throne of William might be subverted by foreign arms, but had, at the same time, facilitated domestic treason. It was no longer necessary for an agent from Saint Germain to cross the sea in a fishing boat, under the constant dread of being intercepted by a cruiser. It was no longer necessary for him to land on a desolate beach, to lodge in a thatched hovel, to dress himself like a carter, or to travel up to town on foot. He came openly by the Calais packet, walked into the best inn at Dover, and ordered posthorses for London. Meanwhile young Englishmen of quality and fortune were hastening in crowds to Paris. They would naturally wish to see him who had once been their king; and this curiosity, though in itself innocent, might have evil consequences. Artful tempters would doubtless be on the watch for every such traveller; and many such travellers might be well pleased to be courteously accosted, in a foreign land, by Englishmen of honourable name, distinguished appearance, and insinuating address. It was not to be expected that a lad fresh from the university would be able to refute all the sophisms and calumnies which might be breathed in his ear by dexterous and experienced seducers. Nor would it be strange if he should, in no long time, accept an invitation to a private audience at Saint Germain, should be charmed by the graces of Mary of Modena, should find something engaging in the childish innocence of the Prince of Wales, should kiss the hand of James, and should return home an ardent Jacobite. An Act was therefore passed forbidding English subjects to hold any intercourse orally, or by writing, or by message, with the exiled family. A day was fixed after which no English subject, who had, during the late war, gone into France without the royal permission or borne arms against his country was to be permitted to reside in this kingdom, except under a special license from the King. Whoever infringed these rules incurred the penalties of high treason.

Acts concerning High Treason.

The dismay was at first great among the malecontents. For English and Irish Jacobites, who had served under the standards of Lewis or hung about the Court of Saint Germain's, had, since the peace, come over in multitudes to England. It was computed that thousands were within the scope of the new Act. But the severity of that Act was mitigated by a beneficent administration. Some fierce and stubborn non-jurors who would not debase themselves by asking for any indulgence, and some conspicuous enemies of the government who had asked for indulgence in vain, were under the necessity of taking refuge on the Continent. But the great majority of those offenders who promised to live peaceably under William's rule obtained his permission to remain in their native land.

In the case of one great offender there were some circumstances which attracted general interest, and which might furnish a good subject to a novelist or a dramatist. Near fourteen years before this time, Sunderland, then Secretary of State to Charles the Second, had married his daughter Lady Elizabeth Spencer to Donough Macarthy, Earl of Clancarty, the lord of an immense domain in Munster. Both the bridegroom and the bride were mere children, the bridegroom only fifteen, the bride only eleven. After the ceremony they were separated; and many years full of strange vicissitudes elapsed before they again met. The boy soon visited his estates in Ireland. He had been bred a member of the Church of England; but his opinions and his practice were loose. He found himself among kinsmen who were zealous Roman Catholics. A Roman Catholic king was on the throne. To turn Roman Catholic was the best recommendation to favour both at Whitehall and at Dublin Castle. Clancarty speedily changed his religion, and from a dissolute Protestant became a dissolute Papist. After the Revolution he followed the fortunes of James; sate in the Celtic Parliament which met at the King's Inns; commanded a regiment in the Celtic army; was forced to surrender himself to Marlborough at Cork; was sent to England, and was imprisoned in the Tower. The Clancarty estates, which were supposed to yield a rent of not much less than ten thousand a year, were confiscated. They were charged with an annuity to the Earl's brother, and with another annuity to his wife: but the greater part was bestowed by the King on Lord Woodstock, the eldest son of Portland. During some time, the prisoner's life was not safe. For the popular voice accused him of outrages for which the utmost license of civil war would not furnish a plea. It is said that he was threatened with an appeal of murder by the widow of a Protestant clergyman who had been put to death during the troubles. After passing three years in confinement, Clancarty made his escape to the Continent, was graciously received at St. Germain, and was entrusted with the command of a corps of Irish refugees. When the treaty of Ryswick had put an end to the hope that the banished dynasty would be restored by foreign arms, he flattered himself that he might be able to make his peace with the English Government. But he was grievously disappointed. The interest of his wife's family was undoubtedly more than sufficient to obtain a pardon for him. But on that interest he could not reckon. The selfish, base, covetous, father-in-law was not at all desirous to have a highborn beggar and the posterity of a highborn beggar to maintain. The ruling passion of the brother-in-law was a stern and acrimonious party spirit. He could not bear to think that he was so nearly connected with an enemy of the Revolution and of the Bill of Rights, and would with pleasure have seen the odious tie severed even by the hand of the executioner. There was one, however, from whom the ruined, expatriated, proscribed young nobleman might hope to find a kind reception. He stole across the Channel in disguise, presented himself at Sunderland's door, and requested to see Lady Clancarty. He was charged, he said, with a message to her from her mother, who was then lying on a sick bed at Windsor. By this fiction he obtained admission, made himself known to his wife, whose thoughts had probably been constantly fixed on him during many years, and prevailed on her to give him the most tender proofs of an affection sanctioned by the laws both of God and of man. The secret was soon discovered and betrayed by a waiting woman. Spencer learned that very night that his sister had admitted her husband to her apartment. The fanatical young Whig, burning with animosity which he mistook for virtue, and eager to emulate the Corinthian who assassinated his brother, and the Roman who passed sentence of death on his son, flew to Vernon's office, gave information that the Irish rebel, who had once already escaped from custody, was in hiding hard by, and procured a warrant and a guard of soldiers. Clancarty was found in the arms of his wife, and dragged to the Tower. She followed him and implored permission to partake his cell. These events produced a great stir throughout the society of London. Sunderland professed everywhere that he heartily approved of his son's conduct: but the public had made up its mind about Sunderland's veracity, and paid very little attention to his professions on this or on any other subject. In general, honourable men of both parties, whatever might be their opinion of Clancarty, felt great compassion for his mother who was dying of a broken heart, and his poor young wife who was begging piteously to be admitted within the Traitor's Gate. Devonshire and Bedford joined with Ormond to ask for mercy. The aid of a still more powerful intercessor was called in. Lady Russell was esteemed by the King as a valuable friend: she was venerated by the nation generally as a saint, the widow of a martyr: and, when she deigned to solicit favours, it was scarcely possible that she should solicit in vain. She naturally felt a strong sympathy for the unhappy couple, who were parted by the walls of that gloomy old fortress in which she had herself exchanged the last sad endearments with one whose image was never absent from her. She took Lady Clancarty with her to the palace, obtained access to William, and put a petition into his hand. Clancarty was pardoned on condition that he should leave the kingdom and never return to it. A pension was granted to him, small when compared with the magnificent inheritance which he had forfeited, but quite sufficient to enable him to live like a gentleman on the Continent. He retired, accompanied by his Elizabeth, to Altona.

All this time the ways and means for the year were under consideration. The Parliament was able to grant some relief to the country. The land tax was reduced from four shillings in the pound to three. But nine expensive campaigns had left a heavy arrear behind them; and it was plain that the public burdens must, even in the time of peace, be such as, before the Revolution, would have been thought more than sufficient to support a vigorous war. A country gentleman was in no very good humour, when he compared the sums which were now exacted from him with those which he had been in the habit of paying under the last two kings; his discontent became stronger when he compared his own situation with that of courtiers, and above all of Dutch courtiers, who had been enriched by grants of Crown property; and both interest and envy made him willing to listen to politicians who assured him that, if those grants were resumed, he might be relieved from another shilling.

The arguments against such a resumption were not likely to be heard with favour by a popular assembly composed of taxpayers, but to statesmen and legislators will seem unanswerable.

Ways and Means.

There can be no doubt that the Sovereign was, by the old polity of the realm, competent to give or let the domains of the Crown in such manner as seemed good to him. No statute defined the length of the term which he might grant, or the amount of the rent which he must reserve. He might part with the fee simple of a forest extending over a hundred square miles in consideration of a tribute of a brace of hawks to be delivered annually to his falconer, or of a napkin of fine linen to be laid on the royal table at the coronation banquet. In fact, there had been hardly a reign since the Conquest, in which great estates had not been bestowed by our princes on favoured subjects. Anciently, indeed, what had been lavishly given was not seldom violently taken away. Several laws for the resumption of Crown lands were passed by the Parliaments of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Of those laws the last was that which, in the year 1485, immediately after the battle of Bosworth, annulled the donations of the kings of the House of York. More than two hundred years had since elapsed without any Resumption Act. An estate derived from the royal liberality had long been universally thought as secure as an estate which had descended from father to son since the compilation of Domesday Book. No title was considered as more perfect than that of the Russells to Woburn, given by Henry the Eighth to the first Earl of Bedford, or than that of the Cecils to Hatfield, purchased from the Crown for less than a third of the real value by the first Earl of Salisbury. The Long Parliament did not, even in that celebrated instrument of nineteen articles, which was framed expressly for the purpose of making the King a mere Doge, propose to re-

Rights of the Sovereign in reference to Crown lands.

strain him from dealing according to his pleasure with his parks and his castles, his fisheries and his mines. After the Restoration, under the government of an easy prince, who had indeed little disposition to give, but who could not bear to refuse, many noble private fortunes were carved out of the property of the Crown. Some of the persons who were thus enriched, Albemarle, for example, Sandwich and Clarendon, might be thought to have fairly earned their master's favour by their services. Others had merely amused his leisure or pandered to his vices. His mistresses were munificently rewarded. Estates sufficient to support the highest rank in the peerage were distributed among his illegitimate children. That these grants, however prodigal, were strictly legal, was tacitly admitted by the Estates of the Realm, when, in 1689, they recounted and condemned the unconstitutional acts of the kings of the House of Stuart. Neither in the Declaration of Right nor in the Bill of Rights is there a word on the subject. William, therefore, thought himself at liberty to give away his hereditary domains as freely as his predecessors had given away their's. There was much murmuring at the profusion with which he rewarded his Dutch favourites; and we have seen that, on one occasion in the year 1696, the House of Commons interfered for the purpose of restraining his liberality. An address was presented requesting him not to grant to Portland an extensive territory in North Wales. But it is to be observed that, though in this address a strong opinion was expressed that the grant would be mischievous, the Commons did not deny, and must therefore be considered as having admitted, that it would be perfectly legal. The King, however, yielded; and Portland was forced to content himself with ten or twelve manors scattered over various counties from Cumberland to Sussex.

It seems, therefore, clear that our princes were, by the law of the land, competent to do what they would with their hereditary estates. It is perfectly true that the law was defective, and that the profusion with which mansions, abbeys, chaces, warrens, beds of ore, whole streets, whole market towns, had been bestowed on courtiers was greatly to be lamented. Nothing could have been more proper than to pass a prospective statute tying up in strict entail the little which still remained of the Crown property. But to annul by a retrospective statute patents, which in Westminster Hall were held to be legally valid, would have been simply robbery. Such robbery must necessarily have made all property insecure; and a statesman must be shortsighted indeed who imagines that what makes property insecure can really make society prosperous.
VOL. VIII.

But it is vain to expect that men who are inflamed by anger, who are suffering distress, and who fancy that it is in their power to obtain immediate relief from their distresses at the expense of those who have excited their anger, will reason as calmly as the historian who, biassed neither by interest nor passion, reviews the events of a past age. The public burdens were heavy. To whatever extent the grants of royal domains were revoked, those burdens would be lightened. Some of the recent grants had undoubtedly been profuse. Some of the living grantees were unpopular. A cry was raised which soon became formidably loud. All the Tories, all the malecontent Whigs, and multitudes who, without being either Tories or malecontent Whigs, disliked taxes and disliked Dutchmen, called for a resumption of all the Crown property which King William had, as it was phrased, been deceived into giving away.

On the seventh of February 1698, this subject, destined to irritate the public mind at intervals during many years, was brought under the consideration of the House of Commons. The opposition asked leave to bring in a

Proceedings in Parliament on grants of Crown lands.

bill vacating all grants of Crown property which had been made since the Revolution. The ministers were in a great strait: the public feeling was strong; a general election was approaching; it was dangerous and it would probably be vain to encounter the prevailing sentiment directly. But the shock which could not be resisted might be eluded. The ministry accordingly professed to find no fault with the proposed bill, except that it did not go far enough, and moved for leave to bring in two more bills, one for annulling the grants of James the Second, the other for annulling the grants of Charles the Second. The Tories were caught in their own snare. For most of the grants of Charles and James had been made to Tories; and a resumption of those grants would have reduced some of the chiefs of the Tory party to poverty. Yet it was impossible to draw a distinction between the grants of William and those of his two predecessors. Nobody could pretend that the law had been altered since his accession. If, therefore, the grants of the Stuarts were legal, so were his: if his grants were illegal, so were the grants of his uncles. And, if both his grants and the grants of his uncles were illegal, it was absurd to say that the mere lapse of time made a difference. For not only was it part of the alphabet of the law that there was no prescription against the Crown, but the thirty eight years which had elapsed since the Restoration would not have sufficed to bar a writ of right brought by a private demandant against a wrongful tenant. Nor could it be pretended that William had bestowed his favours less judiciously than Charles and James. Those who were least friendly to the Dutch would hardly venture to say that Portland, Zulestein and Ginkell were less deserving of the royal bounty than the Duchess of Cleveland and the Duchess of Portsmouth, than the progeny of Nell Gwynn, than the apostate Arlington or the butcher Jeffreys. The opposition, therefore, sullenly assented to what the ministry proposed. From that moment the scheme was doomed. Everybody affected to be for it; and everybody was really against it. The three bills were brought in together, read a second time together, ordered to be committed together, and were then, first mutilated, and at length quietly dropped.

In the history of the financial legislation of this session, there were some episodes which deserve to be related. Those members, a numerous body, who envied and dreaded Montague readily became the unconscious tools of the cunning malice of Sunderland, whom Montague had refused to defend in Parliament, and who, though detested by the opposition, contrived to exercise some influence over that party through the instrumentality of Charles Duncombe. Duncombe indeed had his own reasons for hating Montague, who had turned him out of the place of Cashier of the Excise. A serious charge was brought against the Board of Treasury, and especially against its chief. He was the inventor of Exchequer Bills; and they were popularly called Montague's notes. He had induced the Parliament to enact that those bills, even when at a discount in the market, should be received at par by the collectors of the revenue. This enactment, if honestly carried into effect, would have been unobjectionable. But it was strongly rumoured that there had been foul play, speculation, even forgery. Duncombe threw the most serious imputations on the Board of Treasury, and pretended that he had been put out of his office only because he was too shrewd to be deceived, and too honest to join in deceiving the public. Tories and malecontent Whigs, elated by the hope that Montague might be convicted of malversation, eagerly called for inquiry. An inquiry was instituted; but the result not only disappointed but utterly confounded the accused of peculation.

Montague

accusers. The persecuted minister obtained both a complete acquittal, and a signal revenge. Circumstances were discovered which seemed to indicate that Duncombe himself was not blameless. The clue was followed: he was severely cross-examined; he lost his head; made one unguarded admission after another, and was at length compelled to confess, on the floor of the House, that he had been guilty of an infamous fraud, which, but for his own confession, it would have been scarcely possible to bring home to him. He had been ordered by the Commissioners of the Excise to pay ten thousand pounds into the Exchequer for the public service. He had in his hands, as cashier, more than double that sum in good milled silver. With some of this money he bought Exchequer Bills which were then at a considerable discount: he paid those bills in; and he pocketed the discount, which amounted to about four hundred pounds. Nor was this all. In order to make it appear that the depreciated paper, which he had fraudulently substituted for silver, had been received by him in payment of taxes, he had employed a knavish Jew to forge indorsements of names, some real and some imaginary. This scandalous story, wrung out of his own lips, was heard by the opposition with consternation and shame, by the ministers and their friends with vindictive exultation. It was resolved, without any division, that he should be sent to the Tower, that he should be kept close prisoner there, that he should be expelled from the House. Whether any further punishment could be inflicted on him was a perplexing question. The English law touching forgery became, at a later period, barbarously severe; but, in 1698, it was absurdly lax. The prisoner's offence was certainly not a felony; and lawyers apprehended that there would be much difficulty in convicting him even of a misdemeanour. But a recent precedent was fresh in the minds of all men. The weapon which had reached Fenwick might reach Duncombe. A bill of pains and penalties was brought in, and carried through the earlier stages with less opposition than might have been expected. Some Noes might perhaps be uttered; but no members ventured to say that the Noes had it. The Tories were mad with shame and mortification, at finding that their rash attempt to ruin an enemy had produced no effect except the ruin of a friend. In their rage, they eagerly caught at a new hope of revenge, a hope destined to end, as their former hope had ended, in discomfiture and disgrace. They learned, from the agents of Sunderland, as many people suspected, but certainly from informants who were well acquainted with the offices about Whitehall, that some securities forfeited to the Crown in Ireland had been bestowed by the King ostensibly on one Thomas Railton, but really on the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The value of these securities was about ten thousand pounds. On the sixteenth of February this transaction was brought without any notice under the consideration of the House of Commons by Colonel Granville, a Tory member, nearly related to the Earl of Bath. Montague was taken completely by surprise, but manfully avowed the whole truth, and defended what he had done. The orators of the opposition declaimed against him with great animation and asperity. "This gentleman," they said, "has at once violated three distinct duties. He is a privy councillor, and, as such, is bound to advise the Crown with a view, not to his own selfish interests, but to the general good. He is the first minister of finance, and is, as such, bound to be a thrifty manager of the royal treasure. He is a member of this House, and is, as such, bound to see that the burdens borne by his constituents are not made heavier by rapacity and prodigality. To all these trusts he has been unfaithful. The advice of the privy councillor to his master is, 'Give me money.' The first Lord of the Treasury signs a warrant for giving himself money out of the Treasury. The member for Westminster puts into his pocket money which his constituents must be taxed to replace." The surprise was complete; the onset was formidable: but the Whig majority, after a moment of dismay and wavering, rallied firmly round their leader. Several speakers declared that they highly approved of the prudent liberality with which His Majesty had requited the services of a most able, diligent, and trusty counsellor. It was miserable economy indeed to grudge a reward of a few thousands to one who had made the State richer by millions. Would that all the largesses of former kings had been as well bestowed! How those largesses had been bestowed none knew better than some of the austere patriots who harangued so loudly against the avidity of Montague. If there is, it was said, a house in England which has been gorged with undeserved riches by the prodigality of weak sovereigns, it is the House of Bath. Does it lie in the mouth of a son of that house to blame the judicious munificence of a wise and good king? Before the Granvilles complain that distinguished merit has been rewarded with ten thousand pounds, let them refund some part of the hundreds of thousands which they have pocketed without any merit at all.

The rule was, and still is, that a member against whom a charge is made must be heard in his own defence, and must then leave the House. The opposition insisted that Montague should retire. His friends maintained that this case did not fall within the rule. Distinctions were drawn; precedents were cited; and at length the question was put, that Mr. Montague do withdraw. The Ayes were only ninety seven; the Noes two hundred and nine. This decisive result astonished both parties. The Tories lost heart and hope. The joy of the Whigs was boundless. It was instantly moved that the Honourable Charles Montague, Esquire, Chancellor of the Exchequer, for his good services to this Government does deserve His Majesty's favour. The opposition, completely cowed, did not venture to demand another division. Montague scornfully thanked them for the inestimable service which they had done him. But for their malice he never should have had the honour and happiness of being solemnly pronounced by the Commons of England a benefactor of his country. As to the grant which had been the subject of debate, he was perfectly ready to give it up, if his accusers would engage to follow his example.

Even after this defeat the Tories returned to the charge. They pretended that the frauds which had been committed with respect to the Exchequer Bills had been facilitated by the mismanagement of the Board of Treasury, and moved a resolution which implied a censure on that Board, and especially on its chief. This resolution was rejected by a hundred and seventy votes to eighty-eight. It was remarked that Spencer, as if anxious to show that he had taken no part in the machinations of which his father was justly or unjustly suspected, spoke in this debate with great warmth against Duncombe and for Montague.

A few days later, the bill of pains and penalties against Duncombe passed the Commons. It provided that two thirds of his enormous property, real and personal, should be confiscated and applied to the public service. Till the third reading there was no serious opposition. Then the Tories mustered their strength. They were defeated by a hundred and thirty-eight votes to a hundred and three; and the bill was carried up to the Lords by the Marquess of Hartington, a young nobleman whom the great body of Whigs respected and penalties against Duncombe.

Bill of pains

as one of their hereditary chiefs, as the heir of Devonshire, and as the son in law of Russell.

That Duncombe had been guilty of shameful dishonesty was acknowledged by all men of sense and honour in the party to which he belonged. He had therefore little right to expect indulgence from the party which he had unfairly and malignantly assailed. Yet it is not creditable to the Whigs that they should have been so much disgusted by his frauds, or so much irritated by his attacks, as to have been bent on punishing him in a manner inconsistent with all the principles which governments ought to hold most sacred.

Those who concurred in the proceeding against Duncombe tried to vindicate their conduct by citing as an example the proceeding against Fenwick. So dangerous is it to violate, on any pretence, those principles which the experience of ages has proved to be the safeguards of all that is most precious to a community. Twelve months had hardly elapsed since the legislature had, in very peculiar circumstances, and for very plausible reasons, taken upon itself to try and to punish a great criminal whom it was impossible to reach in the ordinary course of justice; and already the breach then made in the fences which protect the dearest rights of Englishmen was widening fast. What had last year been defended only as a rare exception seemed now to be regarded as the ordinary rule. Nay, the bill of pains and penalties which now had an easy passage through the House of Commons was infinitely more objectionable than the bill which had been so obstinately resisted at every stage in the preceding session.

The writ of attainder against Fenwick was not, as the vulgar imagined and still imagine, objectionable because it was retrospective. It is always to be remembered that retrospective legislation is bad in principle only when it affects the substantive law.

Statutes creating new crimes or increasing the punishment of old crimes ought in no case to be retrospective. But statutes which merely alter the procedure, if they are in themselves good statutes, ought to be retrospective. To take examples from the legislation of our own time, the Act passed in 1845, for punishing the malicious destruction of works of art with whipping, was most properly made prospective only. Whatever indignation the authors of that Act might feel against the ruffian who had broken the Barberini Vase, they knew that they could not, without the most serious detriment to the commonwealth, pass a law for scourging him. On the other hand the Act which allowed the affirmation of a quaker to be received in criminal cases allowed, and most justly and reasonably, such affirmation to be received in the case of a past as well as of a future misdemeanour or felony. If we try the Act which attainted Fenwick by these rules we shall find that almost all the numerous writers who have condemned it have condemned it on wrong grounds. It made no retrospective change in the substantive law. The crime was not new. It was high treason as defined by the Statute of Edward the Third. The punishment was not new. It was the punishment which had been inflicted on traitors of ten generations. All that was new was the procedure; and, if the new procedure had been intrinsically better than the old procedure, the new procedure might with perfect propriety have been employed. But the procedure employed in Fenwick's case was the worst possible, and would have been the worst possible if it had been established from time immemorial. However clearly political crime may have been defined by ancient laws, a man accused of it ought not to be tried by a crowd of five hundred and thirteen eager politicians, of whom he can challenge none even with cause, who have no judge to guide them, who are allowed to come in and go out as they choose, who hear as much or as little as they choose of the accusation and of the defence, who are exposed, during the investigation, to every kind of corrupting influence, who are inflamed by all the passions which animated debates naturally excite, who cheer one orator and cough down another, who are roused from sleep to cry Aye or No, or who are hurried half drunk from their suppers to divide. For this reason, and for no other, the attainder of Fenwick is to be condemned. It was unjust and of evil example, not because it was a retrospective Act, but because it was an act essentially judicial, performed by a body destitute of all judicial qualities.

The bill for punishing Duncombe was open to all the objections which can be urged against the bill for punishing Fenwick, and to other objections of even greater weight. In both cases the judicial functions were usurped by a body unfit to exercise such functions. But the bill against Duncombe really was, what the bill against Fenwick was not, objectionable as a retrospective bill. It altered the substantive criminal law. It visited an offence with a penalty of which the offender, at the time when he offended, had no notice.

It may be thought a strange proposition that the bill against Duncombe was a worse bill than the bill against Fenwick, because the bill against Fenwick struck at life, and the bill against Duncombe struck only at property. Yet this apparent paradox is a sober truth. Life is indeed more precious than property. But the power of arbitrarily taking away the lives of men is infinitely less likely to be abused than the power of arbitrarily taking away their property. Even the lawless classes of society generally shrink from blood. They commit thousands of offences against property to one murder; and most of the few murders which they do commit are committed for the purpose of facilitating or concealing some offence against property. The unwillingness of juries to find a fellow creature guilty of a capital felony even on the clearest evidence is notorious; and it may well be suspected that they frequently violate their oaths in favour of life. In civil suits, on the other hand, they too often forget that their duty is merely to give the plaintiff a compensation for evil suffered; and, if the conduct of the defendant has moved their indignation and his fortune is known to be large, they turn themselves into a criminal tribunal, and, under the name of damages, impose a large fine. As housebreakers are more likely to take plate and jewellery than to cut throats; as juries are far more likely to err on the side of pecuniary severity in assessing damages than to send to the gibbet any man who has not richly deserved it; so a legislature, which should be so unwise as to take on itself the functions properly belonging to the Courts of Law, would be far more likely to pass Acts of Confiscation than Acts of Attainder. We naturally feel pity even for a bad man whose head is about to fall. But, when a bad man is compelled to disgorge his ill-gotten gains, we naturally feel a vindictive pleasure, in which there is much danger that we may be tempted to indulge too largely.

The hearts of many stout Whigs doubtless bled at the thought of what Fenwick must have suffered, the agonising struggle, in a mind not of the firmest temper, between the fear of shame and the fear of death, the parting from a tender wife, and all the gloomy solemnity of the last morning. But whose heart was to bleed at the thought that Charles Duncombe, who was born to carry parcels and to sweep down a counting-house, was to be punished for his knavery by having his income reduced to eight thousand a year, more than most earls then possessed?

His judges were not likely to feel compassion for him; and they all had strong selfish reasons to vote against him. They were all in fact bribed by the very bill by which he would be punished.

His property was supposed to amount to considerably more than four hundred thousand pounds. Two thirds of that property were equivalent to about sevenpence in the pound on the rental of the kingdom as assessed to the land tax. If, therefore, two thirds of that property could have been brought into the Exchequer, the land tax for 1699, a burden most painfully felt by the class which had the chief power in England, might have been reduced from three shillings to two and fivepence. Every squire of a thousand a year in the House of Commons would have had thirty pounds more to spend; and that sum might well have made to him the whole difference between being at ease and being pinched during twelve months. If the bill had passed, if the gentry and yeomanry of the kingdom had found that it was possible for them to obtain a welcome remission of taxation by imposing on a Shylock or an Overreach, by a retrospective law, a fine not heavier than his misconduct might, in a moral view, seem to have deserved, it is impossible to believe that they would not soon have recurred to so simple and agreeable a resource. In every age it is easy to find rich men who have done bad things for which the law has provided no punishment or an inadequate punishment. The estates of such men would soon have been considered as a fund applicable to the public service. As often as it was necessary to vote an extraordinary supply to the Crown, the Committee of Ways and Means would have looked about for some unpopular capitalist to plunder. Appetite would have grown with indulgence. Accusations would have been eagerly welcomed. Rumours and suspicions would have been received as proofs. The wealth of the great goldsmiths of the Royal Exchange would have become as insecure as that of a Jew under the Plantagenets, as that of a Christian under a Turkish Pasha. Rich men would have tried to invest their acquisitions in some form in which they could lie closely hidden and could be speedily removed. In no long time it would have been found that of all financial resources the least productive is robbery, and that the public had really paid far more dearly for Duncombe's hundreds of thousands than if it had borrowed them at fifty per cent.

These considerations had more weight with the Lords than with the Commons. Indeed one of the principal uses of the Upper House is to defend the vested rights of property in cases in which those rights are unpopular, and are attacked on grounds which to shortsighted politicians seem valid. An assembly composed of men almost all of whom have inherited opulence, and who are not under the necessity of paying court to constituent bodies, will not easily be hurried by passion or seduced by sophistry into robbery. As soon as the Bill for punishing Duncombe had been read at the table of the Peers, it became clear that there would be a sharp contest. Three great Tory noblemen, Rochester, Nottingham and Leeds, headed the opposition; and they were joined by some who did not ordinarily act with them. At an early stage of the proceedings a new and perplexing question was raised. How did it appear that the facts set forth in the preamble were true, that Duncombe had committed the frauds for which it was proposed to punish him in so extraordinary a manner? In the House of Commons, he had been taken by surprise: he had made admissions of which he had not foreseen the consequences; and he had then been so much disconcerted by the severe manner in which he had been interrogated that he had at length avowed everything. But he had now had time to prepare himself: he had been furnished with advice by counsel; and, when he was placed at the bar of the Peers, he refused to criminate himself, and defied his persecutors to prove him guilty. He was sent back to the Tower. The Lords acquainted the Commons with the difficulty which had arisen. A conference was held in the Painted Chamber; and there Hartington, who appeared for the Commons, declared that he was authorized, by those who had sent him, to assure the Lords that Duncombe had, in his place in Parliament, owned the misdeeds which he now challenged his accusers to bring home to him. The Lords, however, rightly thought that it would be a strange and a dangerous thing to receive a declaration of the House of Commons in its collective character as conclusive evidence of the fact that a man had committed a crime. The House of Commons was under none of those restraints which were thought necessary in ordinary cases to protect innocent defendants against false witnesses. The House of Commons could not be sworn, could not be cross-examined, could not be indicted, imprisoned, pilloried, mutilated, for perjury. Indeed the testimony of the House of Commons in its collective character was of less value than the uncontradicted testimony of a single member. For it was only the testimony of the majority of the House. There might be a large respectable minority whose recollections might materially differ from the recollections of the majority. This indeed was actually the case. For there had been a dispute among those who had heard Duncombe's confession as to the precise extent of what he had confessed; and there had been a division; and the statement which the Upper House was expected to receive as decisive on the point of fact had been at last carried only by ninety votes to sixty eight. It should seem therefore that, whatever moral conviction the Lords might feel of Duncombe's guilt, they were bound, as righteous judges, to absolve him.

After much animated debate, they divided; and the bill was lost by forty eight votes to forty seven. It was proposed by some of the minority that proxies should be called: but this scandalous proposition was strenuously resisted; and the House, to its great honour, resolved that on questions which were substantially judicial, though they might be in form legislative, no peer who was absent should be allowed to have a voice.

Many of the Whig Lords protested. Among them were Orford and Wharton. It is to be lamented that Burnet, and the excellent Hough, who was now Bishop of Oxford, should have been impelled by party spirit to record their dissent from a decision which all sensible and candid men will now pronounce to have been just and salutary. Somers was present; but his name is not attached to the protest which was subscribed by his brethren of the Junto. We may therefore not unreasonably infer that, on this as on many other occasions, that wise and virtuous statesman disapproved of the violence of his friends.

In rejecting the bill, the Lords had only exercised their indisputable right. But they immediately proceeded to take a step of which the legality was not equally clear.

Dissension between the Houses.

Rochester moved that Duncombe should be set at liberty. The motion was carried: a warrant for the discharge of the prisoner was sent to the Tower, and was obeyed without hesitation by Lord Lucas, who was Lieutenant of that fortress. As soon as this was known, the anger of the Commons broke forth with violence. It was by their order that the upstart Duncombe had been put in ward. He was their prisoner; and it was monstrous insolence in the Peers to release him. The Peers defended what they had done by arguments which must be allowed to have been ingenious, if not satisfactory. It was quite true that Duncombe had originally been committed to the Tower by the Commons. But, it was said, the Commons, by sending a penal bill against him to the Lords, did, by necessary implication, send him also to the Lords. For it was plainly impossible for the Lords to pass the bill without hearing what he had to say against it. The Commons had felt this, and had not complained when he had, without their consent, been brought from his place of confinement, and set at the bar of the Peers. From that moment he was the prisoner of the Peers. He had been taken back from the bar to the Tower, not by virtue of the Speaker's warrant, of which the force was spent, but by virtue of their order which had remanded him. They, therefore, might with perfect propriety discharge him. Whatever a jurist might have thought of these arguments, they had no effect on the Commons. Indeed, violent as the spirit of party was in those times, it was less violent than the spirit of caste. Whenever a dispute arose between the two Houses, many members of both forgot that they were Whigs or Tories, and remembered only that they were Patricians or Plebeians. On this occasion nobody was louder in asserting the privileges of the representatives of the people in opposition to the encroachments of the nobility than Harley. Duncombe was again arrested by the Serjeant at Arms, and remained in confinement till the end of the session. Some eager men were for addressing the King to turn Lucas out of office. This was not done: but during several days the ill humour of the Lower House showed itself by a studied discourtesy. One of the members was wanted as a witness in a matter which the Lords were investigating. They sent two Judges with a message requesting the permission of the Commons to examine him. At any other time the Judges would have been called in immediately, and the permission would have been granted as of course. But on this occasion the Judges were kept waiting some hours at the door; and such difficulties were made about the permission that the Peers desisted from urging a request which seemed likely to be ungraciously refused.

The attention of the Parliament was, during the remainder of the session, chiefly occupied by commercial questions. Some of those questions required so much investigation, and gave occasion to so much dispute, that the prorogation did not take place till the fifth of July. There was consequently some illness and much discontent among both Lords and Commons. For, in that age, the London season usually ended soon after the first notes of the cuckoo had been heard, and before the poles had been decked for the dances and mummeries which welcomed the genial May day of the ancient calendar. Since the year of the Revolution, a year which was an exception to all ordinary rules, the members of the two Houses had never been detained from their woods and haycocks even so late as the beginning of June.

The Commons had, soon after they met, appointed a Committee to enquire into the state of trade, and had referred to this Committee several petitions from merchants and manufacturers who complained that they were in danger of being undersold, and who asked for additional protection.

A highly curious report on the importation of silks and the exportation of wool was soon presented to the House. It was in that age believed by all but a very few speculative men that the sound commercial policy was to keep out of the country the delicate and brilliantly tinted textures of southern looms, and to keep in the country the raw material on which most of our own looms were employed. It was now fully proved that, during eight years of war, the textures which it was thought desirable to keep out had been constantly coming in, and the material which it was thought desirable to keep in had been constantly going out. This interchange, an interchange, as it was imagined, pernicious to England, had been chiefly managed by an association of Huguenot refugees, residing in London. Whole fleets of boats with illicit cargoes had been passing and repassing between Kent and Picardy. The loading and unloading had taken place sometimes in Romney Marsh, sometimes on the beach under the cliffs between Dover and Folkestone. All the inhabitants of the south eastern coast were in the plot. It was a common saying among them that, if a gallows were set up every quarter of a mile along the coast, the trade would still go on briskly. It had been discovered, some years before, that the vessels and the hiding places which were necessary to the business of the smuggler had frequently afforded accommodation to the traitor. The report contained fresh evidence upon this point. It was proved that one of the contrabandists had provided the vessel in which the ruffian O'Brien had carried Scum Goodman over to France.

The inference which ought to have been drawn from these facts was that the prohibitory system was absurd. That system had not destroyed the trade which was so much dreaded, but had merely called into existence a desperate race of men who, accustomed to earn their daily bread by the breach of an unreasonable law, soon came to regard the most reasonable laws with contempt, and, having begun by eluding the custom house officers, ended by conspiring against the throne. And, if, in time of war, when the whole Channel was dotted with our cruisers, it had been found impossible to prevent the regular exchange of the fleeces of Cotswold for the alamoses of Lyons, what chance was there that any machinery which could be employed in time of peace would be more efficacious? The politicians of the seventeenth century, however, were of opinion that sharp laws sharply administered could not fail to save Englishmen from the intolerable grievance of selling dear what could be best produced by themselves, and of buying cheap what could be best produced by others. The penalty for importing French silks was made more severe. An Act was passed which gave to a joint stock company an absolute monopoly of lustrings for a term of fourteen years. The fruit of these wise counsels was such as might have been foreseen. French silks were still imported; and, long before the term of fourteen years had expired, the funds of the Lustering Company had been spent, its offices had been shut up, and its very name had been forgotten at Jonathan's and Garraway's.

Not content with prospective legislation, the Commons unanimously determined to treat the offences which the Committee had brought to light as high crimes against the State, and to employ against a few cunning mercers in Nicholas Lane and the Old Jewry all the gorgeous and cumbrous machinery which ought to be reserved for the delinquencies of great Ministers and Judges. It was resolved, without a division, that several Frenchmen and one Englishman who had been deeply concerned in the contraband trade should be impeached. Managers were appointed: articles were drawn up: preparations were made for fitting up Westminster Hall with benches and scarlet hangings: and at one time it was thought that the trials would last till the partridge shooting began. But the defendants, having little hope of acquittal, and not wishing that the Peers should come to the business of fixing the punishment in the temper which was likely to be the effect of an August passed in London, very wisely declined to give their lordships unnecessary trouble, and pleaded guilty. The sentences were consequently lenient. The French offenders were merely fined; and their fines probably did not amount to a fifth part of the sums which they had realised by unlawful traffic. The Englishman who had been active in managing the escape of Goodman was both fined and imprisoned.

The progress of the woollen manufactures of Ireland excited even more alarm and indignation than the contraband trade with ^{Irish manufac-} France. The French question indeed had been simply commercial. The Irish question, originally commercial, became political. It was not merely the prosperity of the clothiers of Wiltshire and of the West Riding that was at stake ; but the dignity of the Crown, the authority of the Parliament, and the unity of the empire. Already might be discerned among the Englishry, who were now, by the help and under the protection of the mother country, the lords of the conquered island, some signs of a spirit, feeble indeed, as yet, and such as might easily be put down by a few resolute words, but destined to revive at long intervals, and to be stronger and more formidable at every revival.

The person who on this occasion came forward as the champion of the colonists, the forerunner of Swift and of Grattan, was William Molyneux. He would have rejected the name of Irishman as indignantly as a citizen of Marseilles or Cyrene, proud of his pure Greek blood, and fully qualified to send a chariot to the Olympic race course, would have rejected the name of Gaul or Libyan. He was, in the phrase of that time, an English gentleman of family and fortune born in Ireland. He had studied at the Temple, had travelled on the Continent, had become well known to the most eminent scholars and philosophers of Oxford and Cambridge, had been elected a member of the Royal Society of London, and had been one of the founders of the Royal Society of Dublin. In the days of Popish ascendancy he had taken refuge among his friends here : he had returned to his home when the ascendancy of his own caste had been re-established: and he had been chosen to represent the University of Dublin in the House of Commons. He had made great efforts to promote the manufactures of the kingdom in which he resided; and he had found those efforts impeded by an Act of the English Parliament which laid severe restrictions on the exportation of woollen goods from Ireland. In principle this Act was altogether indefensible. Practically it was altogether unimportant. Prohibitions were not needed to prevent the Ireland of the seventeenth century from being a great manufacturing country; nor could the most liberal bounties have made her so. The jealousy of commerce, however, is as fanciful and unreasonable as the jealousy of love. The clothiers of Wilts and Yorkshire were weak enough to imagine that they should be ruined by the competition of a half barbarous island, an island where there was far less capital than in England, where there was far less security for life and property than in England, and where there was far less industry and energy among the labouring classes than in England. Molyneux, on the other hand, had the sanguine temperament of a projector. He imagined that, but for the tyrannical interference of strangers, a Ghent would spring up in Connemara, and a Bruges in the Bog of Allen. And what right had strangers to interfere? Not content with showing that the law of which he complained was absurd and unjust, he undertook to prove that it was null and void. Early in the year 1698 he published and dedicated to the King a treatise in which it was asserted in plain terms that the English Parliament had no authority over Ireland.

Whoever considers without passion or prejudice the great constitutional question which was thus for the first time raised will probably be of opinion that Molyneux was in error. The right of the Parliament of England to legislate for Ireland rested on the broad general principle that the paramount authority of the mother country extends over all colonies planted by her sons in all parts of the world. This principle was the subject of much discussion at the time of the American troubles, and was then maintained, without any reservation, not only by the English Ministers, but by Burke and all the adherents of Rockingham, and was admitted, with one single reservation, even by the Americans themselves. Down to the moment of separation the Congress fully acknowledged the competency of the King, Lords and Commons to make laws, of any kind but one, for Massachusetts and Virginia. The only power which such men as Washington and Franklin denied to the Imperial legislature was the power of taxing. Within living memory, Acts which have made great political and social revolutions in our Colonies have been passed in this country; nor has the validity of those Acts ever been questioned: and conspicuous among them were the law of 1807 which abolished the slave trade, and the law of 1833 which abolished slavery.

The doctrine that the parent state has supreme power over the colonies is not only borne out by authority and by precedent, but will appear, when examined, to be in entire accordance with justice and with policy. During the feeble infancy of colonies independence would be pernicious, or rather fatal, to them. Undoubtedly, as they grow stronger and stronger, it will be wise in the home government to be more and more indulgent. No sensible parent deals with a son of twenty in the same way as with a son of ten. Nor will any government not infatuated treat such a province as Canada or Victoria in the way in which it might be proper to treat a little band of emigrants who have just begun to build their huts on a barbarous shore, and to whom the protection of the flag of a great nation is indispensably necessary. Nevertheless, there cannot really be more than one supreme power in a society. If, therefore, a time comes at which the mother country finds it expedient altogether to abdicate her paramount authority over a colony, one of two courses ought to be taken. There ought to be complete incorporation, if such incorporation be possible. If not, there ought to be complete separation. Very few propositions in politics can be so perfectly demonstrated as this, that parliamentary government cannot be carried on by two really equal and independent parliaments in one empire.

And, if we admit the general rule to be that the English parliament is competent to legislate for colonies planted by English subjects, what reason was there for considering the case of the colony in Ireland as an exception? For it is to be observed that the whole question was between the mother country and the colony. The aboriginal inhabitants, more than five sixths of the population, had no more interest in the matter than the swine or the poultry; or, if they had an interest, it was for their interest that the caste which domineered over them should not be emancipated from all external control. They were no more represented in the parliament which sate at Dublin than in the parliament which sate at Westminster. They had less to dread from legislation at Westminster than from legislation at Dublin. They were, indeed, likely to obtain but a very scanty measure of justice from the English Tories, a more scanty measure still from the English Whigs: but the most acrimonious English Whig did not feel towards them that intense antipathy, compounded of hatred, fear and scorn, with which they were regarded by the Cromwellian who dwelt among them.* For

* That a portion at least of the native population of Ireland looked to the Parliament at Westminster for protection against the tyranny of the Parliament at Dublin appears from a paper entitled The Case of the Roman Catholic Nation of Ireland. This paper, written in 1711 by one of the oppressed race and religion, is in a MS. belonging to Lord Fingall. The Parliament of Irethe Irishry Molyneux, though boasting that he was the champion of liberty, though professing to have learned his political principles from Locke's writings, and though confidently expecting Locke's applause, asked nothing but a more cruel and more hopeless slavery. What he claimed was that, as respected the colony to which he belonged, England should forego rights which she has exercised and is still exercising over every other colony that she has ever planted. And what reason could be given for making such a distinction? No colony had owed so much to England. No colony stood in such need of the support of England. Twice, within the memory of men then living, the natives had attempted to throw off the alien yoke; twice the intruders had been in imminent danger of extirpation; twice England had come to the rescue, and had put down the Celtic population under the feet of her own progeny. Millions of English money had been expended in the struggle. English blood had flowed at the Boyne and at Athlone, at Aghrim and at Limerick. The graves of thousands of English soldiers had been dug in the pestilential morass of Dundalk. It was owing to the exertions and sacrifices of the English people that, from the basaltic pillars of Ulster to the lakes of Kerry, the Saxon settlers were trampling on the children of the soil. The colony in Ireland was therefore emphatically a dependency; a dependency, not merely by the common law of the realm, but by land is accused of treating the Irish worse than the Turks treat the Christians, worse than the Egyptians treated the Israelites. "Therefore," says the writer, "they (the Irish) apply themselves to the present Parliament of Great Britain as a Parliament of nice honour and stanch justice. . . . Their request then is that this great Parliament may make good the Treaty of Limerick in all the Civil Articles." In order to propitiate those to whom he makes this appeal, he accuses the Irish Parliament of encroaching on the supreme authority of the English Parliament, and charges the colonists generally with ingratitude to the mother country to which they owe so much.

the nature of things. It was absurd to claim independence for a community which could not cease to be dependent without ceasing to exist.

Molyneux soon found that he had ventured on a perilous undertaking. A member of the English House of Commons complained in his place that a book which attacked the most precious privileges of the supreme legislature was in circulation. The volume was produced: some passages were read; and a Committee was appointed to consider the whole subject. The Committee soon reported that the obnoxious pamphlet was only one of several symptoms which indicated a spirit such as ought to be suppressed. The Crown of Ireland had been most improperly described in public instruments as an imperial Crown. The Irish Lords and Commons had presumed, not only to reenact an English Act passed expressly for the purpose of binding them, but to reenact it with alterations. The alterations were indeed small: but the alteration even of a letter was tantamount to a declaration of independence. Several addresses were voted without a division. The King was entreated to discourage all encroachments of subordinate powers on the supreme authority of the English legislature, to bring to justice the pamphleteer who had dared to question that authority, to enforce the Acts which had been passed for the protection of the woollen manufactures of England, and to direct the industry and capital of Ireland into the channel of the linen trade, a trade which might grow and flourish in Leinster and Ulster without exciting the smallest jealousy at Norwich or at Halifax.

The King promised to do what the Commons asked: but in truth there was little to be done. The Irish, conscious of their impotence, submitted without a murmur. The Irish woollen manufacture languished and disappeared, as it would, in all probability, have languished and disappeared if it had been left to itself. Had Molyneux lived a few months longer, he would probably have been impeached. But the close of the session was approaching: and before the Houses met again a timely death had snatched him from their vengeance; and the momentous question which had been first stirred by him slept a deep sleep till it was revived in a more formidable shape, after the lapse of twenty six years, by the fourth letter of The Drapier.

Of the commercial questions which prolonged this session far into the summer the most important respected India. Four years had elapsed since the House of Commons had decided that all Englishmen had an equal right to traffic in the Asiatic Seas, unless prohibited by Parliament; and in that decision the King had thought it prudent to acquiesce. Any merchant of London or Bristol might now fit out a ship for Bengal or for China, without the least apprehension of being molested by the Admiralty or sued in the Courts of Westminster. No wise man, however, was disposed to stake a large sum on such a venture. For the vote which protected him from annoyance here left him exposed to serious risks on the other side of the Cape of Good Hope. The Old Company, though its exclusive privileges were no more, and though its dividends had greatly diminished, was still in existence, and still retained its castles and warehouses, its fleet of fine merchantmen, and its able and zealous factors, thoroughly qualified by a long experience to transact business both in the palaces and in the bazaars of the East, and accustomed to look for direction to the India House alone. The private trader therefore still ran great risk of being treated as a smuggler, if not as a pirate. He might indeed, if he was wronged, apply for redress to the tribunals of his country. But years must elapse before his cause could be heard; his witnesses

East India Companies.

must be conveyed over fifteen thousand miles of sea; and in the meantime he was a ruined man. The experiment of free trade with India had therefore been tried under every disadvantage, or, to speak more correctly, had not been tried at all. The general opinion had always been that some restriction was necessary; and that opinion had been confirmed by all that had happened since the old restrictions had been removed. The doors of the House of Commons were again besieged by the two great contending factions of the City. The Old Company offered, in return for a monopoly secured by law, a loan of seven hundred thousand pounds; and the whole body of Tories was for accepting the offer. But those indefatigable agitators who had, ever since the Revolution, been striving to obtain a share in the trade of the Eastern seas exerted themselves at this conjuncture more strenuously than ever, and found a powerful patron in Montague.

That dexterous and eloquent statesman had two objects in view. One was to obtain for the State, as the price of the monopoly, a sum much larger than the Old Company was able to give. The other was to promote the interest of his own party. Nowhere was the conflict between Whigs and Tories sharper than in the City of London; and the influence of the City of London was felt to the remotest corner of the realm. To elevate the Whig section of that mighty commercial aristocracy which congregated under the arches of the Royal Exchange, and to depress the Tory section, had long been one of Montague's favourite schemes. He had already formed one citadel in the heart of that great emporium; and he now thought that it might be in his power to erect and garrison a second stronghold in a position scarcely less commanding. It had often been said, in times of civil war, that whoever was master of the Tower and of Tilbury Fort was master of London. The fastnesses by means of which Montague proposed to keep the capital obedient in times of peace and of constitutional government were of a different kind. The Bank was one of his fortresses; and he trusted that a new India House would be the other.

The task which he had undertaken was not an easy one. For, while his opponents were united, his adherents were divided. Most of those who were for a New Company thought that the New Company ought, like the Old Company, to trade on a joint stock. But there were some who held that our commerce with India would be best carried on by means of what is called a regulated Company. There was a Turkey Company, the members of which contributed to a general fund, and had in return the exclusive privilege of trafficking with the Levant: but those members trafficked, each on his own account: they forestalled each other; they undersold each other: one became rich; another became bankrupt. The Corporation meanwhile watched over the common interest of all the members, furnished the Crown with the means of maintaining an embassy at Constantinople, and placed at several important ports consuls and vice-consuls, whose business was to keep the Pacha and the Cadi in good humour, and to arbitrate in disputes among Englishmen. Why might not the same system be found to answer in regions lying still further to the east? Why should not every member of the New Company be at liberty to export European commodities to the countries beyond the Cape, and to bring back shawls, saltpetre and bohea to England, while the Company, in its collective capacity, might treat with Asiatic potentates, or exact reparation from them, and might be entrusted with powers for the administration of justice and for the government of forts and factories?

•

dexterity of the Old Company and its friends from the first week of May to the last week in June. It seems that many even of Montague's followers doubted whether the promised two millions would be forthcoming. His enemies confidently predicted that the General Society would be as complete a failure as the Land Bank had been in the year before the last, and that he would in the autumn find himself in charge of an empty exchequer. His activity and eloquence, however, prevailed. On the twenty sixth of June, after many laborious sittings, the question was put that this Bill do pass, and was carried by one hundred and fifteen votes to seventy eight. In the upper House the conflict was short and sharp. Some Peers declared that, in their opinion, the subscription to the proposed loan, far from amounting to the two millions which the Chancellor of the Exchequer expected, would fall far short of one million. Others, with much reason, complained that a law of such grave importance should have been sent up to them in such a shape that they must either take the whole or throw out the whole. The privilege of the Commons with respect to money bills had of late been grossly abused. The Bank had been created by one money bill; this General Society was to be created by another money bill. Such a bill the Lords could not amend: they might indeed reject it; but to reject it was to shake the foundations of public credit and to leave the kingdom defenceless. Thus one branch of the legislature was systematically put under duress by the other, and seemed likely to be reduced to utter insignificance. It was better that the government should be once pinched for money than that the House of Peers should cease to be part of the Constitution. So strong was this feeling that the bill was carried only by sixty five to forty eight. It received the royal sanction on the fifth of July. The King then spoke from the throne. This was the first occasion on which a King of England had spoken to a Parliament of which the existence was about to be terminated, not by his own act, but by the act of the law. He could not, he said, take leave of the Lords and Gentlemen before him without publicly acknowledging the great things which they had done for his dignity and for the welfare of the nation. He recounted the chief services which they had, during three eventful sessions, rendered to the country. "These things will," he said, "give a lasting reputation to this Parliament, and will be a subject of emulation to Parliaments which shall come after." The Houses were then prorogued.

During the week which followed there was some anxiety as to the result of the subscription for the stock of the General Society. If that subscription failed, there would be a deficit: public credit would be shaken; and Montague would be regarded as a pretender who had owed his reputation to a mere run of good luck, and who had tempted chance once too often. But the event was such as even his sanguine spirit had scarcely ventured to anticipate. At one in the afternoon of the 14th of July the books were opened at the Hall of the Company of Mercers in Cheapside. An immense crowd was already collected in the street. As soon as the doors were flung wide, wealthy citizens, with their money in their hands, pressed in, pushing and elbowing each other. The guineas were paid down faster than the clerks could count them. Before night six hundred thousand pounds had been subscribed. The next day the throng was as great. More than one capitalist put down his name for thirty thousand pounds. To the astonishment of those ill-boding politicians, who were constantly repeating that the war, the debt, the taxes, the grants to Dutch courtiers, had ruined the kingdom, the sum, which it had been doubted whether England would be able to raise in many weeks, was subscribed by London in a few hours. The applications from the provincial towns and rural districts came too late. The merchants of Bristol had intended to take three hundred thousand pounds of the stock, but had waited to learn how the subscription went on before they gave their final orders; and, by the time that the mail had gone down to Bristol and returned, there was no more stock to be had.

This was the moment at which the fortunes of Montague reached the meridian. The decline was close at hand. His ability and his constant success were everywhere talked of with admiration and envy. That man, it was commonly said, has never wanted, and never will want, an expedient.

During the long and busy session which had just closed, some interesting and important events had taken place which may properly be mentioned here. One of those events was the destruction of the most celebrated palace in which the sovereigns of England have ever dwelt. On the evening of the 4th of January, a woman—the patriotic journalists and pamphleteers of that time did not fail to note that she was a Dutch woman,—who was employed as a laundress at Whitehall, lighted a charcoal fire in her room and placed some linen round it. The linen caught fire and burned furiously. The tapestry, the bedding, the wainscots were soon in a blaze. The unhappy woman who had done the mischief perished. Soon the flames burst out of the windows. All Westminster, all the Strand, all the river were in commotion. Before midnight the King's apartments, the Queen's apartments, the Wardrobe, the Treasury, the office of the Privy Council, the office of the Secretary of State, had been destroyed. The two chapels perished together: that ancient chapel where Wolsey had heard mass in the midst of gorgeous copes, golden candlesticks, and jewelled crosses, and that modern edifice which had been erected for the devotions of James and had been embellished by the pencil of Verrio and the chisel of Gibbons. Meanwhile a great extent of building had been blown up; and it was hoped that by this expedient a stop had been put to the conflagration. But early in the morning a new fire broke out of the heaps of combustible matter which the gunpowder had scattered to right and left. The guard room was consumed. No trace was left of that celebrated gallery which had witnessed so many balls and pageants, in which so many maids of honour had listened too easily to the vows and flatteries of gallants, and in which so many bags of gold had changed masters at the hazard table. During some time men despaired of the Banqueting House. The flames broke in on the south of that beautiful hall, and were with great difficulty extinguished by the exertions of the guards, to whom Cutts, mindful of his honourable nickname of the Salamander, set as good an example on this night of terror as he had set in the breach at Namur. Many lives were lost, and many grievous wounds were inflicted by the falling masses of stone and timber, before the fire was effectually subdued. When day broke, the heaps of smoking ruins spread from Scotland Yard to the Bowling Green, where the mansion of the Duke of Buccleuch now stands. The Banqueting House was safe; but the graceful columns and festoons designed by Inigo were so much defaced and blackened that their form could hardly be discerned. There had been time to move the most valuable effects which were moveable. Unfortunately some of Holbein's finest pictures were painted on the walls, and are consequently known to us only by copies and engravings. The books of the Treasury and of the Privy Council were rescued, and are still preserved. The Ministers whose offices had been burned down were provided with new offices in the neighbourhood. Henry the Eighth had built, close to St. James' Park, two appendages to the Palace of Whitehall, a cockpit and a tennis court. The Treasury now occupies the site of the cockpit, the Privy Council Office the site of the tennis court.

Fire at Whitehall.

Notwithstanding the many associations which make the name of Whitehall still interesting to an Englishman, the old building was little regretted. It was spacious indeed and commodious, but mean and inelegant. The people of the capital had been annoyed by the scoffing way in which foreigners spoke of the principal residence of our sovereigns, and often said that it was a pity that the great fire had not spared the old portico of St. Paul's and the stately arcades of Gresham's Bourse, and taken in exchange that ugly old labyrinth of dingy brick and plastered timber. It might now be hoped that we should have a Louvre. Before the ashes of the old Palace were cold, plans for a new palace were circulated and discussed. But William, who could not draw his breath in the air of Westminster, was little disposed to expend a million on a house which it would have been impossible for him to inhabit. Many blamed him for not restoring the dwelling of his predecessors; and a few Jacobites, whom evil temper and repeated disappointments had driven almost mad, accused him of having burned it down. It was not till long after his death that Tory writers ceased to call for the rebuilding of Whitehall, and to complain that the King of England had no better town house than St. James's, while the delightful spot where the Tudors and the Stuarts had held their councils and their revels was covered with the mansions of his jobbing courtiers.*

* London Gazette, Jan. 6. Spy; William to Heinsius, Jan. 1697; Postman of the same date; $\frac{7}{17}$; "The loss," the King writes, Van Cleverskirke, Jan. $\frac{7}{17}$; "is less to me than it would be L'Hermitage, Jan. $\frac{4}{17}$, $\frac{7}{17}$; Evelyn's Diary; Ward's London live there. Yet it is serious."

In the same week in which Whitehall perished, the Londoners were supplied with a new topic of conversation by a royal visit, which, of all royal visits, was the least pompous and ceremonious and yet the most interesting and important. On the 10th of January a vessel from Holland anchored off Greenwich and was welcomed with great respect. Peter the First, Czar of Muscovy, was on board. He took boat with a few attendants and was rowed up the Thames to Norfolk Street, where a house overlooking the river had been prepared for his reception.

Visit of the Czar.

His journey is an epoch in the history, not only of his own country, but of our's, and of the world. To the polished nations of Western Europe, the empire which he governed had till then been what Bokhara or Siam is to us. That empire indeed, though less extensive than at present, was the most extensive that had ever obeyed a single chief. The dominions of Alexander and of Trajan were small when compared with the immense area of the Scythian desert. But in the estimation of statesmen that boundless expanse of larch forest and morass, where the snow lay deep during eight months of every year, and where a wretched peasantry could with difficulty defend their hovels against troops of famished wolves, was of less account than the two or three square miles into which were crowded the counting houses, the warehouses, and the innumerable masts of Amsterdam. On the Baltic Russia had not then a

So late as 1758 Johnson described a furious Jacobite as firmly convinced that William burned down Whitehall in order to steal the furniture. Idler, No. 10. Pope, in Windsor Forest, a poem which has a stronger tinge of Toryism than anything else that he ever wrote, predicts the speedy restoration of the fallen palace.

"I see, I see, where two fair cities bend
Their ample bow, a new Whitehall ascend."

See Ralph's bitter remarks on the fate of Whitehall.

single port. Her maritime trade with the other nations of Christendom was entirely carried on at Archangel, a place which had been created and was supported by adventurers from our island. In the days of the Tudors, a ship from England, seeking a north east passage to the land of silk and spice, had discovered the White Sea. The barbarians who dwelt on the shores of that dreary gulf had never before seen such a portent as a vessel of a hundred and sixty tons burden. They fled in terror; and, when they were pursued and overtaken, prostrated themselves before the chief of the strangers and kissed his feet. He succeeded in opening a friendly communication with them; and from that time there had been a regular commercial intercourse between our country and the subjects of the Czar. A Russia Company was incorporated in London. An English factory was built at Archangel. That factory was indeed, even in the latter part of the seventeenth century, a rude and mean building. The walls consisted of trees laid one upon another; and the roof was of birch bark. This shelter, however, was sufficient in the long summer day of the Arctic regions. Regularly at that season several English ships cast anchor in the bay. A fair was held on the beach. Traders came from a distance of many hundreds of miles to the only mart where they could exchange hemp and tar, hides and tallow, wax and honey, the fur of the sable and the wolverine, and the roe of the sturgeon of the Volga, for Manchester stuffs, Sheffield knives, Birmingham buttons, sugar from Jamaica; and pepper from Malabar. The commerce in these articles was open. But there was a secret traffic which was not less active or less lucrative, though the Russian laws had made it punishable, and though the Russian divines pronounced it damnable. In general the mandates of princes and the lessons of priests were received by the Muscovite with profound reverence. But the authority of his princes and of his priests united could not keep him from tobacco. Pipes he could not obtain; but a cow's horn perforated served his turn. From every Archangel fair rolls of the best Virginia speedily found their way to Novgorod and Tobolsk.

The commercial intercourse between England and Russia made some diplomatic intercourse necessary. The diplomatic intercourse however was only occasional. The Czar had no permanent minister here. We had no permanent minister at Moscow; and even at Archangel we had no consul. Three or four times in a century extraordinary embassies were sent from Whitehall to the Kremlin and from the Kremlin to Whitehall.

The English embassies had historians whose narratives may still be read with interest. Those historians described vividly, and sometimes bitterly, the savage ignorance and the squalid poverty of the barbarous country in which they had sojourned. In that country, they said, there was neither literature nor science, neither school nor college. It was not till more than a hundred years after the invention of printing that a single printing press had been introduced into the Russian empire; and that printing press had speedily perished in a fire which was supposed to have been kindled by the priests. Even in the seventeenth century the library of a prelate of the first dignity consisted of a few manuscripts. Those manuscripts too were in long rolls: for the art of bookbinding was unknown. The best educated men could barely read and write. It was much if the secretary to whom was entrusted the direction of negotiations with foreign powers had a sufficient smattering of Dog Latin to make himself understood. The arithmetic was the arithmetic of the dark ages. The denary notation was unknown. Even in the Imperial Treasury the computations were made by the help of balls strung on wires. Round the person of the Sovereign there was a blaze of gold and jewels : but even in his most splendid palaces were to be found the filth and misery of an Irish cabin. So late as the year 1663 the gentlemen of the retinue of the Earl of Carlisle were, in the city of Moscow, thrust into a single bedroom, and were told that, if they did not remain together, they would be in danger of being devoured by rats.

Such was the report which the English legations made of what they had seen and suffered in Russia ; and their evidence was confirmed by the appearance which the Russian legations made in England. The strangers spoke no civilised language. Their garb, their gestures, their salutations, had a wild and barbarous character. The ambassador and the grandees who accompanied him were so gorgeous that all London crowded to stare at them, and so filthy that nobody dared to touch them. They came to the court balls dropping pearls and vermin. It was said that one envoy cudgelled the lords of his train whenever they soiled or lost any part of their finery, and that another had with difficulty been prevented from putting his son to death for the crime of shaving and dressing after the French fashion.

Our ancestors therefore were not a little surprised to learn that a young barbarian, who had, at seventeen years of age, become the autocrat of the immense region stretching from the confines of Sweden to those of China, and whose education had been inferior to that of an English farmer or shopman, had planned gigantic improvements, had learned enough of some languages of Western Europe to enable him to communicate with civilised men, had begun to surround himself with able adventurers from various parts of the world, had sent many of his young subjects to study languages, arts and sciences in foreign cities, and finally had determined to travel as a private man, and to discover, by personal observation, the secret of the immense prosperity and power enjoyed by some communities whose whole territory was far less than the hundredth part of his dominions.

It might have been expected that France would have been the first object of his curiosity. For the grace and dignity of the French King, the splendour of the French Court, the discipline of the French armies, and the genius and learning of the French writers, were then renowned all over the world. But the Czar's mind had early taken a strange ply which it retained to the last. His empire was of all empires the least capable of being made a great naval power. The Swedish provinces lay between his States and the Baltic. The Bosphorus and the Dardanelles lay between his States and the Mediterranean. He had access to the ocean only in a latitude in which navigation is, during a great part of every year, perilous and difficult. On the ocean he had only a single port, Archangel; and the whole shipping of Archangel was foreign. There did not exist a Russian vessel larger than a fishing-boat. Yet, from some cause which cannot now be traced, he had a taste for maritime pursuits which amounted to a passion, indeed almost to a monomania. His imagination was full of sails, yard-arms, and rudders. That large mind, equal to the highest duties of the general and the statesman, contracted itself to the most minute details of naval architecture and naval discipline. The chief ambition of the great conqueror and legislator was to be a good boatswain and a good ship's carpenter. Holland and England therefore had for him an attraction which was wanting to the galleries and terraces of Versailles. He repaired to Amsterdam, took a lodging in the dockyard, assumed the garb of a pilot, put down his name on the list of workmen, wielded with his own hand the caulking iron and the mallet, fixed the pumps, and twisted the ropes. Ambassadors who came to pay their respects to him were forced, much against their will, to clamber up the rigging of a man of war, and found him enthroned on the cross trees.

Such was the prince whom the populace of London now crowded to behold. His stately form, his intellectual forehead, his piercing black eyes, his Tartar nose and mouth, his gracious smile, his frown black with all the stormy rage and hate of a barbarian tyrant, and above all a strange nervous convulsion which sometimes transformed his countenance, during a few moments, into an object on which it was impossible to look without terror, the immense quantities of meat which he devoured, the pints of brandy which he swallowed, and which, it was said, he had carefully distilled with his own hands, the fool who jabbered at his feet, the monkey which grinned at the back of his chair, were, during some weeks, popular topics of conversation. He meanwhile shunned the public gaze with a haughty shyness which inflamed curiosity. He went to a play; but, as soon as he perceived that pit, boxes and galleries were staring, not at the stage, but at him, he retired to a back bench where he was screened from observation by his attendants. He was desirous to see a sitting of the House of Lords; but, as he was determined not to be seen, he was forced to climb up to the leads, and to peep through a small window. He heard with great interest the royal assent given to a bill for raising fifteen hundred thousand pounds by land tax, and learned with amazement that this sum, though larger by one half than the whole revenue which he could wring from the population of the immense empire of which he was absolute master, was but a small part of what the Commons of England voluntarily granted every year to their constitutional King.

William judiciously humoured the whims of his illustrious guest, and stole to Norfolk Street so quietly that nobody in the neighbourhood recognised His Majesty in the thin gentleman who got out of the modest looking coach at the Czar's lodgings. The Czar returned the visit with the same precautions, and was admitted into Kensington House by a back door. It was afterwards known that he took no notice of the fine pictures with which the palace was adorned. But over the chimney of the royal sitting room was a plate which, by an ingenious machinery, indicated the direction of the wind; and with this plate he was in raptures.

He soon became weary of his residence. He found that he was too far from the objects of his curiosity, and too near to the crowds to which he was himself an object of curiosity. He accordingly removed to Deptford, and was there lodged in the house of John Evelyn, a house which had long been a favourite resort of men of letters, men of taste and men of science. Here Peter gave himself up to his favourite pursuits. He navigated a yacht every day up and down the river. His apartment was crowded with models of three deckers and two deckers, frigates, sloops and fireships. The only Englishman of rank in whose society he seemed to take much pleasure was the eccentric Caermarthen, whose passion for the sea bore some resemblance to his own, and who was very competent to give an opinion about every part of a ship from the stem to the stern. Caermarthen, indeed, became so great a favourite that he prevailed on the Czar to consent to the admission of a limited quantity of tobacco into Russia. There was reason to apprehend that the Russian clergy would cry out against any relaxation of the ancient rule, and would strenuously maintain that the practice of smoking was condemned by that text which declares that man is defiled, not by those things which enter in at the mouth, but by those things which proceed out of it. This apprehension was expressed by a deputation of merchants who were admitted to an audience of the Czar: but they were reassured by the air with which he told them that he knew how to keep priests in order.

He was indeed so free from any bigoted attachment to the religion in which he had been brought up that both Papists and Protestants hoped at different times to make him a proselyte. Burnet, commissioned by his brethren, and impelled, no doubt, by his own restless curiosity and love of meddling, repaired to Deptford and was honoured with several audiences. The Czar could not be persuaded to exhibit himself at Saint Paul's; but he was induced to visit Lambeth palace. There he saw the ceremony of ordination performed, and expressed warm approbation of the Anglican ritual. Nothing in England astonished him so much as the Archiepiscopal library. It was the first good collection of books that he had seen; and he declared that he had never imagined that there were so many printed volumes in the world.

The impression which he made on Burnet was not favourable. The good bishop could not understand that a mind which seemed to be chiefly occupied with questions about the best place for a capstan and the best way of rigging a jury mast might be capable, not merely of ruling an empire, but of creating a nation. He complained that he had gone to see a great prince, and had found only an industrious shipwright. Nor does Evelyn seem to have formed a much more favourable opinion of his august tenant. It was, indeed, not in the character of tenant that the Czar was likely to gain the good word of civilised men. With all the high qualities which were peculiar to himself, he had all the filthy habits which were then common among his countrymen. To the end of his life, while disciplining armies, founding schools, framing codes, organising tribunals, building cities in deserts, joining distant seas by artificial rivers, he lived in his palace like a hog in a sty; and, when he was entertained by other sovereigns, never failed to leave on their tapestried walls and velvet state beds unequivocal proof that a savage had been there. Evelyn's house was left in such a state that the Treasury quieted his complaints with a considerable sum of money.

Towards the close of March the Czar visited Portsmouth, saw a sham sea-fight at Spithead, watched every movement of the contending fleets with intense interest, and expressed in warm terms his gratitude to the hospitable government which had provided so delightful a spectacle for his amusement and instruction. After passing more than three months in England, he departed in high good humour.*

His visit, his singular character, and what was rumoured of his great designs, excited much curiosity here, but nothing more than curiosity. England had as yet nothing to hope or to fear from his vast empire. All her serious apprehensions were directed towards a different quarter. None could say how soon France, so lately an enemy, might be an enemy again.

* As to the Czar:—London Gazette; Van Citters, 1698; Jan. $\frac{11}{21}$, $\frac{14}{24}$; Mar. $\frac{11}{21}$; Mar. 22; Mar. 29; April 1; April 8; L'Hermitage, Jan. $\frac{11}{21}$, $\frac{18}{28}$; Jan. 25; Feb. 1; Feb. 22; Feb. 25; Feb. 11; Feb. 18; Feb. 21; Mar. 4; Mar. 7; Mar. 14; Mar. 29; April 22; April 8; May 2. See also Evelyn's Diary; Burnet; Postman, Jan. 13. 15.; Feb. 10. 12. 24.; Mar. 24. 26. 31. As to Russia, see Hakluyt, Purchas, Voltaire, St. Simon. Estat de Russie par Margeret, Paris, 1607. State of Russia, London, 1671. La Relation des Trois Ambassades de M. Le Comte de Carlisle, Amsterdam, 1672. (There is an English translation from this French original.) North's Life of Dudley North. Seymour's History of London, ii. 426. Pepys and Evelyn on the Russian Embassies; Milton's account of Muscovy. On the personal habits of the Czar see the Memoirs of the Margravine of Bareuth.

property had been bestowed on men whose services to the state well deserved a much larger recompense ; and that part could not be resumed without gross injustice and ingratitude. An estate of very moderate value had been given, with the title of Earl of Athlone, to Ginkell, whose skill and valour had brought the war in Ireland to a triumphant close. Another estate had been given, with the title of Earl of Galway, to Rouvigny, who, in the crisis of the decisive battle, at the very moment when Saint Ruth was waving his hat, and exclaiming that the English should be beaten back to Dublin, had, at the head of a gallant body of horse, struggled through the morass, turned the left wing of the Celtic army, and retrieved the day. But the predominant faction, drunk with insolence and animosity, made no distinction between courtiers who had been enriched by injudicious partiality and warriors who had been sparingly rewarded for great exploits achieved in defence of the liberties and the religion of our country. Athlone was a Dutchman : Galway was a Frenchman ; and it did not become a good Englishman to say a word in favour of either.

Yet this was not the most flagrant injustice of which the Commons were guilty. According to the plainest principles of common law and of common sense, no man can forfeit any rights except those which he has. All the donations which William had made he had made subject to this limitation. But by this limitation the Commons were too angry and too rapacious to be bound. They determined to vest in the trustees of the forfeited lands an estate greater than had ever belonged to the forfeiting landholders. Thus innocent persons were violently deprived of property which was theirs by descent or by purchase, of property which had been strictly respected by the King and by his grantees. No immunity was granted even to men who had fought on the English side, by the Board of Treasury when Godolphin and Seymour, who had great influence with the country party, sate at that board.

Howe's two resolutions were laid before the King by the Speaker, in whose train all the leaders of the opposition appeared at Kensington. Even Seymour, with characteristic effrontery, showed himself there as one of the chief authors of a vote which pronounced him guilty of a breach of duty. William's answer was that he had thought himself bound to reward out of the forfeited property those who had served him well, and especially those who had borne a principal part in the reduction of Ireland. The war, he said, had undoubtedly left behind it a heavy debt; and he should be glad to see that debt reduced by just and effectual means. This answer was but a bad one; and, in truth, it was hardly possible for him to return a good one. He had done what was indefensible; and, by attempting to defend himself, he made his case worse. It was not true that the Irish forfeitures, or one fifth part of them, had been granted to men who had distinguished themselves in the Irish war; and it was not judicious to hint that those forfeitures could not justly be applied to the discharge of the public debts. The Commons murmured, and not altogether without reason. "His Majesty tells us," they said, "that the debts fall to us and the forfeitures to him. We are to make good out of the purses of Englishmen what was spent upon the war; and he is to put into the purses of Dutchmen what was got by the war." When the House met again, Howe moved that whoever had advised the King to return such an answer was an enemy to His Majesty and the kingdom; and this resolution was carried with some slight modification.

To whatever criticism William's answer might be open, he had said one thing which well deserved the attention of the House. A small part of the forfeited

There was nothing which he was not ready to do or suffer for William. But in his intercourse with William he was blunt and sometimes surly. Keppel, on the other hand, had a great desire to please, and looked up with unfeigned admiration to a master whom he had been accustomed, ever since he could remember, to consider as the first of living men. Arts, therefore, which were neglected by the elder courtier were assiduously practised by the younger. So early as the spring of 1691 shrewd observers were struck by the manner in which Keppel watched every turn of the King's eye, and anticipated the King's unuttered wishes. Gradually the new servant rose into favour. He was at length made Earl of Albemarle and Master of the Robes. But his elevation, though it furnished the Jacobites with a fresh topic for calumny and ribaldry, was not so offensive to the nation as the elevation of Portland had been. Portland's manners were thought dry and haughty; but envy was disarmed by the blandness of Albemarle's temper and by the affability of his deportment. Portland, though strictly honest, was covetous: Albemarle was generous. Portland had been naturalised here only in name and form: but Albemarle affected to have forgotten his own country, and to have become an Englishman in feelings and manners. The palace was soon disturbed by quarrels in which Portland seems to have been always the aggressor, and in which he found little support either among the English or among his own countrymen. William, indeed, was not the man to discard an old friend for a new one. He steadily gave, on all occasions, the preference to the companion of his youthful days. Portland had the first place in the bed-chamber. He held high command in the army. On all great occasions he was trusted and consulted. He was far more powerful in Scotland than the Lord High Commissioner, and far deeper in the secret of foreign affairs than the Secretary of State. He wore the Garter, which sovereign princes coveted. Lands and money had been bestowed on him so liberally that he was one of the richest subjects in Europe. Albemarle had as yet not even a regiment; he had not been sworn of the Council: and the wealth which he owed to the royal bounty was a pittance when compared with the domains and the hoards of Portland. Yet Portland thought himself aggrieved. He could not bear to see any other person near him, though below him, in the royal favour. In his fits of resentful sullenness, he hinted an intention of retiring from the Court. William omitted nothing that a brother could have done to sooth and conciliate a brother. Letters are still extant in which he, with the utmost solemnity, calls God to witness that his affection for Bentinck still is what it was in their early days. At length a compromise was made. Portland, disgusted with Kensington, was not sorry to go to France as ambassador; and William with deep emotion consented to a separation longer than had ever taken place during an intimacy of twenty-five years. A day or two after the new plenipotentiary had set out on his mission, he received a touching letter from his master. "The loss of your society," the King wrote, "has affected me more than you can imagine. I should be very glad if I could believe that you felt as much pain at quitting me as I felt at seeing you depart: for then I might hope that you had ceased to doubt the truth of what I so solemnly declared to you on my oath. Assure yourself that I never was more sincere. My feeling towards you is one which nothing but death can alter." It should seem that the answer returned to these affectionate assurances was not perfectly gracious: for when the King next wrote, he gently complained of an expression which had wounded him severely.

property had been bestowed on men whose services to the state well deserved a much larger recompense ; and that part could not be resumed without gross injustice and ingratitude. An estate of very moderate value had been given, with the title of Earl of Athlone, to Ginkell, whose skill and valour had brought the war in Ireland to a triumphant close. Another estate had been given, with the title of Earl of Galway, to Rouvigny, who, in the crisis of the decisive battle, at the very moment when Saint Ruth was waving his hat, and exclaiming that the English should be beaten back to Dublin, had, at the head of a gallant body of horse, struggled through the morass, turned the left wing of the Celtic army, and retrieved the day. But the predominant faction, drunk with insolence and animosity, made no distinction between courtiers who had been enriched by injudicious partiality and warriors who had been sparingly rewarded for great exploits achieved in defence of the liberties and the religion of our country. Athlone was a Dutchman : Galway was a Frenchman ; and it did not become a good Englishman to say a word in favour of either.

Yet this was not the most flagrant injustice of which the Commons were guilty. According to the plainest principles of common law and of common sense, no man can forfeit any rights except those which he has. All the donations which William had made he had made subject to this limitation. But by this limitation the Commons were too angry and too rapacious to be bound. They determined to vest in the trustees of the forfeited lands an estate greater than had ever belonged to the forfeiting landholders. Thus innocent persons were violently deprived of property which was theirs by descent or by purchase, of property which had been strictly respected by the King and by his grantees. No immunity was granted even to men who had fought on the English side, the charge of popery, and, by way of a decisive blow, gave the definition of a true Church from the nineteenth Article. Portland stared at him. "I am glad, Mr. Prior, to find you so good a Christian. I was afraid that you were an atheist." "An atheist, my good Lord!" cried Prior. "What could lead your Lordship to entertain such a suspicion?" "Why," said Portland, "I knew that you were a poet; and I took it for granted that you did not believe in God." "My lord," said the wit, "you do us poets the greatest injustice. Of all people we are the farthest from atheism. For the atheists do not even worship the true God, whom the rest of mankind acknowledge; and we are always invoking and hymning false gods whom everybody else has renounced." This jest will be perfectly intelligible to all who remember the eternally recurring allusions to Venus and Minerva, Mars, Cupid and Apollo, which were meant to be the ornaments, and are the blemishes, of Prior's compositions. But Portland was much puzzled. However, he declared himself satisfied; and the young diplomatist withdrew, laughing to think with how little learning a man might shine in courts, lead armies, negotiate treaties, obtain a coronet and a garter, and leave a fortune of half a million.

The citizens of Paris and the courtiers of Versailles, though more accustomed than the Londoners to magnificent pageantry, allowed that no minister from any foreign state had ever made so superb an appearance as Portland. His horses, his liveries, his plate, were unrivalled. His state carriage, drawn by eight fine Neapolitan greys decorated with orange ribands, was specially admired. On the day of his public entry the streets, the balconies, and the windows were crowded with spectators along a line of three miles. As he passed over the bridge on which the statue of Henry IV. stands, he was much amused by hearing one of the crowd exclaim: "Was it not this gentleman's master that we burned on this very bridge eight years ago?" The Ambassador's hotel was constantly thronged from morning to night by visitors in plumes and embroidery. Several tables were sumptuously spread every day under his roof; and every English traveller of decent station and character was welcome to dine there. The board at which the master of the house presided in person, and at which he entertained his most distinguished guests, was said to be more luxurious than that of any prince of the House of Bourbon. For there the most exquisite cookery of France was set off by a certain neatness and comfort which then, as now, peculiarly belonged to England. During the banquet the room was filled with people of fashion, who went to see the *grande*s eat and drink. The expense of all this splendour and hospitality was enormous, and was exaggerated by report. The cost to the English government really was fifty thousand pounds in five months. It is probable that the opulent gentlemen who accompanied the mission as volunteers laid out nearly as much more from their private resources.

The malecontents at the coffeehouses of London murmured at this profusion, and accused William of ostentation. But, as this fault was never, on any other occasion, imputed to him even by his detractors, we may not unreasonably attribute to policy what to superficial or malicious observers seemed to be vanity. He probably thought it important, at the commencement of a new era in the relations between the two great kingdoms of the West, to hold high the dignity of the Crown which he wore. He well knew, indeed, that the greatness of a prince does not depend on piles of silver bowls and chargers, trains of gilded coaches, and multitudes of running footmen in brocade, and led horses in velvet housings. But he knew also that the subjects of Lewis had, during the long reign of their magnificent sovereign, been accustomed to see power constantly associated with pomp, and would hardly believe that the substance existed unless they were dazzled by the trappings.

If the object of William was to strike the imagination of the French people, he completely succeeded. The stately and gorgeous appearance which the English embassy made on public occasions was, during some time, the general topic of conversation at Paris. Portland enjoyed a popularity which contrasts strangely with the extreme unpopularity which he had incurred in England. The contrast will perhaps seem less strange when we consider what immense sums he had accumulated at the expense of the English, and what immense sums he was laying out for the benefit of the French. It must also be remembered that he could not confer or correspond with Englishmen in their own language, and that the French tongue was at least as familiar to him as that of his native Holland. He, therefore, who here was called greedy, niggardly, dull, brutal, whom one English nobleman had described as a block of wood, and another as just capable of carrying a message right, was in the brilliant circles of France considered as a model of grace, of dignity and of munificence, as a dexterous negotiator and a finished gentleman. He was the better liked because he was a Dutchman. For, though fortune had favoured William, though considerations of policy had induced the Court of Versailles to acknowledge him, he was still, in the estimation of that Court, an usurper; and his English councillors and captains were perjured traitors who richly deserved axes and halters, and might, perhaps, get what they deserved. But Bentinck was not to be confounded with Leeds and Marlborough, Orford and Godolphin. He had broken no oath, had violated no law. He owed no allegiance to the House of Stuart; and the fidelity and zeal with which he had discharged his duties to his own country and his own master entitled him to respect. The noble and powerful vied with each other in paying honour to the stranger.

The Ambassador was splendidly entertained by the Duke of Orleans at St. Cloud, and by the Dauphin at Meudon. A Marshal of France was charged to do the honours of Marli; and Lewis graciously expressed his concern that the frosts of an ungenial spring prevented the fountains and flower beds from appearing to advantage. On one occasion Portland was distinguished, not only by being selected to hold the waxlight in the royal bedroom, but by being invited to go within the balustrade which surrounded the couch, a magic circle which the most illustrious foreigners had hitherto found impassable. The Secretary shared largely in the attentions which were paid to his chief. The Prince of Condé took pleasure in talking with him on literary subjects. The courtesy of the aged Bossuet, the glory of the Church of Rome, was long gratefully remembered by the young heretic. Boileau had the good sense and good feeling to exchange a friendly greeting with the aspiring novice who had administered to him a discipline as severe as he had administered to Quinault. The great King himself warmly praised Prior's manners and conversation, a circumstance which will be thought remarkable when it is remembered that His Majesty was an excellent model and an excellent judge of gentlemanlike deportment, and that Prior had passed his boyhood in drawing corks at a tavern, and his early manhood in the seclusion of a college. The Secretary did not however carry his politeness so far as to refrain from asserting, on proper occasions, the dignity of his country and of his master. He looked coldly on the twenty-one celebrated pictures in which

Le Brun had represented on the ceiling of the gallery of Versailles the exploits of Lewis. When he was sneeringly asked whether Kensington Palace could boast of such decorations, he answered, with spirit and propriety: "No, Sir. The memorials of the great things which my master has done are to be seen in many places; but not in his own house." Great as was the success of the embassy, there was one drawback. James was still at Saint Germain; and round the mock King were gathered a mock Court and Council, a Great Seal and a Privy Seal, a crowd of garters and collars, white staves and gold keys. Against the pleasure which the marked attentions of the French princes and grandees gave to Portland, was to be set off the vexation which he felt when Middleton crossed his path with the busy look of a real Secretary of State. But it was with emotions far deeper that the Ambassador saw on the terraces and in the antechambers of Versailles men who had been deeply implicated in plots against the life of his master. He expressed his indignation loudly and vehemently. "I hope," he said, "that there is no design in this; that these wretches are not purposely thrust in my way. When they come near me all my blood runs back in my veins." His words were reported to Lewis. Lewis employed Boufflers to smooth matters; and Boufflers took occasion to say something on the subject as if from himself. Portland easily divined that in talking with Boufflers he was really talking with Lewis, and eagerly seized the opportunity of representing the expediency, the absolute necessity, of removing James to a greater distance from England. "It was not contemplated, Marshal," he said, "when we arranged the terms of peace in Brabant, that a palace in the suburbs of Paris was to continue to be an asylum for outlaws and murderers." "Nay, my Lord," said Boufflers, uneasy doubtless on his own account,

"you will not, I am sure, assert that I gave you any pledge that King James would be required to leave France. You are too honourable a man, you are too much my friend, to say any such thing." "It is true," answered Portland, "that I did not insist on a positive promise from you; but remember what passed. I proposed that King James should retire to Rome or Modena. Then you suggested Avignon; and I assented. Certainly my regard for you makes me very unwilling to do anything that would give you pain. But my master's interests are dearer to me than all the friends that I have in the world put together. I must tell His Most Christian Majesty all that passed between us; and I hope that, when I tell him, you will be present, and that you will be able to bear witness that I have not put a single word of mine into your mouth."

When Boufflers had argued and expostulated in vain, Villeroy was sent on the same errand, but had no better success. A few days later Portland had a long private audience of Lewis. Lewis declared that he was determined to keep his word, to preserve the peace of Europe, to abstain from everything which could give just cause of offence to England; but that, as a man of honour, as a man of humanity, he could not refuse shelter to an unfortunate King, his own first cousin. Portland replied that nobody questioned His Majesty's good faith; but that while Saint Germain's was occupied by its present inmates it would be beyond even His Majesty's power to prevent eternal plotting between them and the malecontents on the other side of the Straits of Dover, and that, while such plotting went on, the peace must necessarily be insecure. The question was really not one of humanity. It was not asked, it was not wished, that James should be left destitute. Nay, the English government was willing to allow him an income larger than that which he derived from the munificence of France. Fifty thousand pounds a year, to which in strictness of law he had no right, awaited his acceptance, if he would only move to a greater distance from the country which, while he was near it, could never be at rest. If, in such circumstances, he refused to move, this was the strongest reason for believing that he could not safely be suffered to stay. The fact that he thought the difference between residing at Saint Germain and residing at Avignon worth more than fifty thousand a year sufficiently proved that he had not relinquished the hope of being restored to his throne by means of a rebellion or of something worse. Lewis answered that on that point his resolution was unalterable. He never would compel his guest and kinsman to depart. "There is another matter," said Portland, "about which I have felt it my duty to make representations. I mean the countenance given to the assassins." "I know nothing about assassins," said Lewis. "Of course," answered the Ambassador, "your Majesty knows nothing about such men. At least your Majesty does not know them for what they are. But I can point them out, and can furnish ample proofs of their guilt." He then named Berwick. For the English government, which had been willing to make large allowances for Berwick's peculiar position as long as he confined himself to acts of open and manly hostility, conceived that he had forfeited all claim to indulgence by becoming privy to the Assassination Plot. This man, Portland said, constantly haunted Versailles. Barclay, whose guilt was of a still deeper dye,—Barclay, the chief contriver of the murderous ambushade of Turnham Green,—had found in France, not only an asylum, but an honourable military position. The monk who was sometimes called Harrison and sometimes went by the alias of Johnson, but who, whether Harrison or Johnson, had been one of the earliest and one of the most bloodthirsty of Barclay's accomplices, was now comfortably settled as prior of a religious house in France. Lewis denied or evaded all these charges. "I never," he said, "heard of your Harrison. As to Barclay, he certainly once had a company: but it has been disbanded; and what has become of him I do not know. It is true that Berwick was in London towards the close of 1695; but he was there only for the purpose of ascertaining whether a descent on England was practicable: and I am confident that he was no party to any cruel and dishonourable design." In truth Lewis had a strong personal motive for defending Berwick. The guilt of Berwick as respected the Assassination Plot does not appear to have extended beyond connivance; and to the extent of connivance Lewis himself was guilty.

Thus the audience terminated. All that was left to Portland was to announce that the exiles must make their choice between Saint Germain's and fifty thousand a year; that the protocol of Ryswick bound the English government to pay to Mary of Modena only what the law gave her; that the law gave her nothing; that consequently the English government was bound to nothing; and that, while she, her husband and her child remained where they were, she should have nothing. It was hoped that this announcement would produce a considerable effect even in James's household; and indeed some of his hungry courtiers and priests seem to have thought the chance of a restoration so small that it would be absurd to refuse a splendid income, though coupled with a condition which might make that small chance somewhat smaller. But it is certain that, if there was murmuring among the Jacobites, it was disregarded by James. He was fully resolved not to move, and was only confirmed in his resolution by learning that he was regarded by the usurper as a dangerous neighbour. Lewis paid so much regard to Portland's complaints as to intimate to Middleton a request, equivalent to a command, that the Lords and gentlemen who formed the retinue of the banished King of England would not come to Versailles on days on which the representative of the actual King was expected there. But at other places there was constant risk of an encounter which might have produced several duels, if not an European war. James indeed, far from shunning such encounters, seems to have taken a perverse pleasure in thwarting his benefactor's wish to keep the peace, and in placing the Ambassador in embarrassing situations. One day his Excellency, while drawing on his boots for a run with the Dauphin's celebrated wolf pack, was informed that King James meant to be of the party, and was forced to stay at home. Another day, when his Excellency had set his heart on having some sport with the royal staghounds, he was informed by the Grand Huntsman that King James might probably come to the rendezvous without any notice. Melfort was particularly active in laying traps for the young noblemen and gentlemen of the Legation. The Prince of Wales was more than once placed in such a situation that they could scarcely avoid passing close to him. Were they to salute him? Were they to stand erect and covered while everybody else saluted him? No Englishman zealous for the Bill of Rights and the Protestant religion would willingly do anything which could be construed into an act of homage to a Popish pretender. Yet no goodnatured and generous man, however firm in his Whig principles, would willingly offer anything which could look like an affront to an innocent and most unfortunate child.

Meanwhile other matters of grave importance claimed Portland's attention. There was one matter in particular about which the succession.

The Spanish

property had been bestowed on men whose services to the state well deserved a much larger recompense ; and that part could not be resumed without gross injustice and ingratitude. An estate of very moderate value had been given, with the title of Earl of Athlone, to Ginkell, whose skill and valour had brought the war in Ireland to a triumphant close. Another estate had been given, with the title of Earl of Galway, to Rouvigny, who, in the crisis of the decisive battle, at the very moment when Saint Ruth was waving his hat, and exclaiming that the English should be beaten back to Dublin, had, at the head of a gallant body of horse, struggled through the morass, turned the left wing of the Celtic army, and retrieved the day. But the predominant faction, drunk with insolence and animosity, made no distinction between courtiers who had been enriched by injudicious partiality and warriors who had been sparingly rewarded for great exploits achieved in defence of the liberties and the religion of our country. Athlone was a Dutchman : Galway was a Frenchman ; and it did not become a good Englishman to say a word in favour of either.

Yet this was not the most flagrant injustice of which the Commons were guilty. According to the plainest principles of common law and of common sense, no man can forfeit any rights except those which he has. All the donations which William had made he had made subject to this limitation. But by this limitation the Commons were too angry and too rapacious to be bound. They determined to vest in the trustees of the forfeited lands an estate greater than had ever belonged to the forfeiting landholders. Thus innocent persons were violently deprived of property which was theirs by descent or by purchase, of property which had been strictly respected by the King and by his grantees. No immunity was granted even to men who had fought on the English side, by the Board of Treasury when Godolphin and Seymour, who had great influence with the country party, sate at that board.

Howe's two resolutions were laid before the King by the Speaker, in whose train all the leaders of the opposition appeared at Kensington. Even Seymour, with characteristic effrontery, showed himself there as one of the chief authors of a vote which pronounced him guilty of a breach of duty. William's answer was that he had thought himself bound to reward out of the forfeited property those who had served him well, and especially those who had borne a principal part in the reduction of Ireland. The war, he said, had undoubtedly left behind it a heavy debt; and he should be glad to see that debt reduced by just and effectual means. This answer was but a bad one; and, in truth, it was hardly possible for him to return a good one. He had done what was indefensible; and, by attempting to defend himself, he made his case worse. It was not true that the Irish forfeitures, or one fifth part of them, had been granted to men who had distinguished themselves in the Irish war; and it was not judicious to hint that those forfeitures could not justly be applied to the discharge of the public debts. The Commons murmured, and not altogether without reason. "His Majesty tells us," they said, "that the debts fall to us and the forfeitures to him. We are to make good out of the purses of Englishmen what was spent upon the war; and he is to put into the purses of Dutchmen what was got by the war." When the House met again, Howe moved that whoever had advised the King to return such an answer was an enemy to His Majesty and the kingdom; and this resolution was carried with some slight modification.

To whatever criticism William's answer might be open, he had said one thing which well deserved the attention of the House. A small part of the forfeited departed. It was long since couriers bearing orders big with the fate of kings and commonwealths had ridden forth from those gloomy portals. Military renown, maritime ascendancy, the policy once reputed so profound, the wealth once deemed inexhaustible, had passed away. An undisciplined army, a rotting fleet, an incapable council, an empty treasury, were all that remained of that which had been so great. Yet the proudest of nations could not bear to part even with the name and the shadow of a supremacy which was no more. All, from the grandee of the first class to the peasant, looked forward with dread to the day when God should be pleased to take their king to himself. Some of them might have a predilection for Germany: but such predilections were subordinate to a stronger feeling. The paramount object was the integrity of the empire of which Castile was the head; and the prince who should appear to be most likely to preserve that integrity unviolated would have the best right to the allegiance of every true Castilian.

No man of sense, however, out of Castile, when he considered the nature of the inheritance and the situation of the claimants, could doubt that a partition was inevitable. Among those claimants three stood preeminent, the Dauphin, the Emperor Leopold, and the Electoral Prince of Bavaria.

If the question had been simply one of pedigree, the right of the Dauphin would have been incontestible. Lewis the Fourteenth had married the Infanta Maria Theresa, eldest daughter of Philip the Fourth and sister of Charles the Second. Her eldest son, the Dauphin, would therefore, in the regular course of things, have been her brother's successor. But she had, at the time of her marriage, renounced, for herself and her posterity, all pretensions to the Spanish crown.

To that renunciation her husband had assented.

It had been made an article of the Treaty of the Pyrenees. The Pope had been requested to give his apostolical sanction to an arrangement so important to the peace of Europe; and Lewis had sworn, by everything that could bind a gentleman, a king, and a Christian, by his honour, by his royal word, by the canon of the Mass, by the Holy Gospels, by the Cross of Christ, that he would hold the renunciation sacred.*

The claim of the Emperor was derived from his mother Mary Anne, daughter of Philip the Third, and aunt of Charles the Second, and could not therefore, if nearness of blood alone were to be regarded, come into competition with the claim of the Dauphin. But the claim of the Emperor was barred by no renunciation. The rival pretensions of the great Houses of Bourbon and Hapsburg furnished all Europe with an inexhaustible subject of discussion. Plausible topics were not wanting to the supporters of either cause. The partisans of the House of Austria dwelt on the sacredness of treaties; the partisans of France on the sacredness of birthright. How, it was asked on one side, can a Christian king have the effrontery, the impiety, to insist on a claim which he has with such solemnity renounced in the face of heaven and earth? How, it was asked on the other side, can the fundamental laws of a monarchy be annulled by any authority but that of the supreme legislature? The only body which was competent to take away from the children of Maria Theresa their

* It is worth while to transcribe the words of the engagement which Lewis, a chivalrous and a devout prince, violated without the smallest scruple. "Nous, Louis, par la grace de Dieu, Roi très Chrétien de France et de Navarre, promettons pour notre honneur, en foi et parole de Roi, jurons sur la croix, les saints Evangiles, et les canons de la Messe, que nous avons touchés, que nous observerons et accomplirons entièrement de bonne foi, tous et chacun des points et articles contenus au traité de paix, renonciation, et amitié."

hereditary rights was the Cortes. The Cortes had not ratified her renunciation. That renunciation was therefore a nullity; and no swearing, no signing, no sealing, could turn that nullity into a reality.

Which of these two mighty competitors had the better case may perhaps be doubted. What could not be doubted was that neither would obtain the prize without a struggle which would shake the world. Nor can we justly blame either for refusing to give way to the other. For, on this occasion, the chief motive which actuated them was, not greediness, but the fear of degradation and ruin. Lewis, in resolving to put everything to hazard rather than suffer the power of the House of Austria to be doubled; Leopold, in determining to put everything to hazard rather than suffer the power of the House of Bourbon to be doubled; merely obeyed the law of self preservation. There was therefore one way, and one alone, by which the great woe which seemed to be coming on Europe could be averted. Was it possible that the dispute might be compromised? Might not the two great rivals be induced to make to a third party concessions such as neither could reasonably be expected to make to the other?

The third party, to whom all who were anxious for the peace of Christendom looked as their best hope, was a child of tender age, Joseph, son of the Elector of Bavaria. His mother, the Electress Mary Antoinette, was the only child of the Emperor Leopold by his first wife Margaret, a younger sister of the Queen of Lewis the Fourteenth. Prince Joseph was, therefore, nearer in blood to the Spanish throne than his grandfather the Emperor, or than the sons whom the Emperor had by his second wife. The Infanta Margaret had indeed, at the time of her marriage, renounced her rights to the kingdom of her forefathers. But the renunciation wanted many formalities which had been observed in her sister's case, and might be considered as cancelled by the will of Philip the Fourth, which had declared that, failing his issue male, Margaret and her posterity would be entitled to inherit his Crown. The partisans of France held that the Bavarian claim was better than the Austrian claim; the partisans of Austria held that the Bavarian claim was better than the French claim. But that which really constituted the strength of the Bavarian claim was the weakness of the Bavarian government. The Electoral Prince was the only candidate whose success would alarm nobody; would not make it necessary for any power to raise another regiment, to man another frigate, to have in store another barrel of gunpowder. He was therefore the favourite candidate of prudent and peaceable men in every country.

Thus all Europe was divided into the French, the Austrian, and the Bavarian factions. The contests of these factions were daily renewed in every place where men congregated, from Stockholm to Malta, and from Lisbon to Smyrna. But the fiercest and most obstinate conflict was that which raged in the palace of the Catholic King. Much depended on him. For, though it was not pretended that he was competent to alter by his sole authority the law which regulated the descent of the Crown, yet, in a case in which the law was doubtful, it was probable that his subjects might be disposed to accept the construction which he might put upon it, and to support the claimant whom he might, either by a solemn adoption or by will, designate as the rightful heir. It was also in the power of the reigning sovereign to entrust all the most important offices in his kingdom, the government of all the provinces subject to him in the Old and in the New World, and the keys of all his fortresses and arsenals, to persons zealous for the family which he was inclined to favour. It was difficult to say to what extent the fate of whole nations might be affected by the conduct of the officers who, at the time of his decease, might command the garrisons of Barcelona, of Mons, and of Namur.

The prince on whom so much depended was the most miserable of human beings. In old times he would have been exposed as soon as he came into the world; and to expose him would have been a kindness. From his birth a blight was on his body and on his mind. With difficulty his almost imperceptible spark of life had been screened and fanned into a dim and flickering flame. His childhood, except when he could be rocked and sung into sickly sleep, was one long piteous wail. Till he was ten years old his days were passed on the laps of women; and he was never once suffered to stand on his rickety legs. None of those tawny little urchins, clad in rags stolen from scarecrows, whom Murillo loved to paint begging or rolling in the sand, owed less to education than this despotic ruler of thirty millions of subjects. The most important events in the history of his own kingdom, the very names of provinces and cities which were among his most valuable possessions, were unknown to him. It may well be doubted whether he was aware that Sicily was an island, that Christopher Columbus had discovered America, or that the English were not Mahometans. In his youth, however, though too imbecile for study or for business, he was not incapable of being amused. He shot, hawked and hunted. He enjoyed with the delight of a true Spaniard two delightful spectacles, a horse with its bowels gored out, and a Jew writhing in the fire. The time came when the mightiest of instincts ordinarily wakens from its repose. It was hoped that the young king would not prove invincible to female attractions, and that he would leave a Prince of Asturias to succeed him. A consort was found for him in the royal family of France; and her beauty and grace gave him a languid pleasure. He liked to adorn her with jewels, to see her dance, and to tell her what sport he had had with his dogs and his falcons. But it was soon whispered that she was a wife only in name. She died; and her place was supplied by a German princess nearly allied to the Imperial House. But the second marriage, like the first, proved barren; and, long before the king had passed the prime of life, all the politicians of Europe had begun to take it for granted in all their calculations that he would be the last descendant, in the male line, of Charles the Fifth. Meanwhile a sullen and abject melancholy took possession of his soul. The diversions which had been the serious employment of his youth became distasteful to him. He ceased to find pleasure in his nets and boar spears, in the fandango and the bullfight. Sometimes he shut himself up in an inner chamber from the eyes of his courtiers. Sometimes he loitered alone, from sunrise to sunset, in the dreary and rugged wilderness which surrounds the Escorial. The hours which he did not waste in listless indolence were divided between childish sports and childish devotions. He delighted in rare animals, and still more in dwarfs. When neither strange beasts nor little men could dispel the black thoughts which gathered in his mind, he repeated Aves and Credos: he walked in processions: sometimes he starved himself: sometimes he whipped himself. At length a complication of maladies completed the ruin of all his faculties. His stomach failed: nor was this strange; for in him the malformation of the jaw, characteristic of his family, was so serious that he could not masticate his food; and he was in the habit of swallowing ollas and sweetmeats in the state in which they were set before him. While suffering from indigestion he was attacked by ague. Every third day his convulsive tremblings, his dejection, his fits of wandering, seemed to indicate the approach of dissolution. His misery was increased by the knowledge that everybody was calculating how long he had to live, and wondering what would become of his kingdoms when he should be dead. The stately dignitaries of his household, the physicians who ministered to his diseased body, the divines whose business was to sooth his not less diseased mind, the very wife who should have been intent on those gentle offices by which female tenderness can alleviate even the misery of hopeless decay, were all thinking of the new world which was to commence with his death, and would have been perfectly willing to see him in the hands of the embalmer if they could have been certain that his successor would be the prince whose interest they espoused. As yet the party of the Emperor seemed to predominate. Charles had a faint sort of preference for the House of Austria, which was his own house, and a faint sort of antipathy to the House of Bourbon, with which he had been quarrelling, he did not well know why, ever since he could remember. His Queen, whom he did not love, but of whom he stood greatly in awe, was devoted to the interests of her kinsman the Emperor; and with her was closely leagued the Count of Melgar, Hereditary Admiral of Castile and Prime Minister.

Such was the state of the question of the Spanish succession at the time when Portland had his first public audience at Versailles. The French ministers were certain that he must be constantly thinking about that question, and were therefore perplexed by his evident determination to say nothing about it. They watched his lips in the hope that he would at least let fall some unguarded word indicating the hopes or fears entertained by the English and Dutch Governments. But Portland was not a man out of whom much was to be got in that way. Nature and habit cooperating had made him the best keeper of secrets in Europe. Lewis therefore directed Pomponne and Torcy, two ministers of eminent ability, who had, under himself, the chief direction of foreign affairs, to introduce the subject which the discreet confidant of William seemed studiously to avoid. Pomponne and Torcy accordingly repaired to the English embassy, and there opened one of the most remarkable negotiations recorded in the annals of European diplomacy.

The two French statesmen professed in their master's name the most earnest desire, not only that the peace might remain unbroken, but that there might be a close union between the Courts of Versailles and Kensington. One event only seemed likely to raise new troubles. If the Catholic King should die before it had been settled who should succeed to his immense dominions, there was but too much reason to fear that the nations, which were just beginning to breathe after an exhausting and devastating struggle of nine years, would be again in arms. His Most Christian Majesty was therefore desirous to employ the short interval which might still remain, in concerting with the King of England the means of preserving the tranquillity of the world.

Portland made a courteous but guarded answer. He could not, he said, presume to say exactly what William's sentiments were: but this he knew, that it was not solely or chiefly by the sentiments of the King of England that the policy of England on a great occasion would be regulated. The islanders must and would have their government administered according to certain maxims which they held sacred; and of those maxims they held none more sacred than this, that every increase of the power of France ought to be viewed with extreme jealousy.

Pomponne and Torcy answered that their master was most desirous to avoid everything which could excite the jealousy of which Portland had spoken. But was it of France alone that a nation so enlightened as the English must be jealous? Was it forgotten that the House of Austria had once aspired to universal dominion? And would it be wise in the princes and commonwealths of Europe to lend their aid for the purpose of reconstructing the gigantic monarchy which, in the sixteenth century, had seemed likely to overwhelm them all?

Portland answered that, on this subject, he must be understood to express only the opinions of a private man. He had however now lived, during some years, among the English, and believed himself to be pretty well acquainted with their temper. They would not, he thought, be much alarmed by any augmentation of power which the Emperor might obtain. The sea was their element. Traffic by sea was the great source of their wealth; ascendancy on the sea the great object of their ambition. Of the Emperor they had no fear. Extensive as was the area which he governed, he had not a frigate on the water; and they cared nothing for his Pandours and Croatians. But France had a great navy. The balance of maritime power was what would be anxiously watched in London; and the balance of maritime power would not be affected by an union between Spain and Austria, but would be most seriously deranged by an union between Spain and France.

Pomponne and Torcy declared that everything should be done to quiet the apprehensions which Portland had described. It was not contemplated, it was not wished, that France and Spain should be united. The Dauphin and his eldest son the Duke of Burgundy would waive their rights. The younger brothers of the Duke of Burgundy, Philip Duke of Anjou and Charles Duke of Berry, were not named: but Portland perfectly understood what was meant. There would, he said, be scarcely less alarm in England if the Spanish dominions devolved on a grandson of His Most Christian Majesty than if they were annexed to the French crown. The laudable affection of the young princes for their country and their family, and their profound respect for the great monarch from whom they were descended, would inevitably determine their policy. The two kingdoms would be one; the two navies would be one; and all other states would be reduced to vassalage. England would rather see the Spanish monarchy added to the Emperor's dominions than governed by one of the younger French princes, who would, though nominally independent, be really a viceroy of France. But in truth there was no risk that the Spanish monarchy would be added to the Emperor's dominions. He and his eldest son the Archduke Joseph would, no doubt, be as ready to waive their rights as the Dauphin and the Duke of Burgundy could be; and thus the Austrian claim to the disputed heritage would pass to the younger Archduke Charles. A long discussion followed. At length Portland plainly avowed, always merely as his own private opinion, what was the opinion of every intelligent man who wished to preserve the peace of the world. "France is afraid," he said, "of everything which can increase the power of the Emperor. All Europe is afraid of everything which can increase the power of France. Why not put an end to all these uneasy feelings at once, by agreeing to place the Electoral Prince of Bavaria on the throne of Spain?" To this suggestion no decisive answer was returned. The conference ended; and a courier started for England with a despatch informing William of what had passed, and soliciting further instructions.

William, who was, as he had always been, his own Secretary for Foreign Affairs, did not think it necessary to discuss the contents of this despatch with any of his English ministers. The only person whom he consulted was Heinsius. Portland received a kind letter warmly approving all that he had said in the conference, and directing him to declare that the English government sincerely wished to avert the calamities which were but too likely to follow the death of the King of Spain, and would therefore be prepared to take into serious consideration any definite plan which His Most Christian Majesty might think fit to suggest. "I will own to you," William wrote to his friend "that I am so unwilling to be again at war during the short time which I still have to live, that I will omit nothing that I can honestly and with a safe conscience do for the purpose of maintaining peace."

William's message was delivered by Portland to Lewis at a private audience. In a few days Pomponne and Torcy were authorised to propose a plan. They fully admitted that all neighbouring states were entitled to demand the strongest security against the union of the French and Spanish crowns. Such security should be given. The Spanish government might be requested to choose between the Duke of Anjou and the Duke of Berry. The youth who was selected would, at the utmost, be only fifteen years old, and could not be supposed to have any very deeply rooted national prejudices. He should be sent to Madrid without French attendants, should be educated by Spaniards, should become a Spaniard. It was absurd to imagine that such a prince would be a mere viceroy of France. Apprehensions had been sometimes hinted that a Bourbon, seated on the throne of Spain, might cede his dominions in the Netherlands to the head of his family. It was undoubtedly important to England, and all important to Holland, that those provinces should not become a part of the French monarchy. All danger might be averted by making them over to the Elector of Bavaria, who was now governing them as representative of the Catholic King. The Dauphin would be perfectly willing to renounce them for himself and for all his descendants. As to what concerned trade, England and Holland had only to say what they desired, and everything in reason should be done to give them satisfaction.

As this plan was, in the main, the same which had been suggested by the French ministers in the former conference, Portland did little more than repeat what he had then said. As to the new scheme respecting the Netherlands, he shrewdly propounded a dilemma which silenced Pomponne and Torcy.

If renunciations were of any value, the Dauphin and his posterity were excluded from the Spanish succession; and, if renunciations were of no value, it was idle to offer England and Holland a renunciation as a guarantee against a great danger.

The French ministers withdrew to make their report to their master, and soon returned to say that their proposals had been merely first thoughts, that it was now the turn for King William to suggest something, and that whatever he might suggest should receive the fullest and fairest consideration.

And now the scene of the negotiation was shifted from Versailles to Kensington. The Count of Tallard had just set out for England as Ambassador. He was a fine gentleman: he was a brave soldier; and he was as yet reputed a skilful general. In all the arts and graces which were prized as qualifications for diplomatic missions of the highest class, he had, among the brilliant aristocracy to which he belonged, no superior and only one equal, the Marquess of Harcourt, who was entrusted with the care of the interests of the House of Bourbon at Madrid.

Tallard carried with him instructions carefully framed in the French Foreign Office. He was reminded that his situation would be widely different

The Count of Tallard's Embassy.

their property, not as their home; who, when they have gorged themselves with our wealth, will, without one uneasy feeling, leave us sunk in bankruptcy, distracted by faction, exposed without defence to invasion. "A new war," said one of these orators, "a new war, as long, as bloody, and as costly as the last, would do less mischief than has been done by the introduction of that batch of Dutchmen among the barons of the realm." Another was so absurd as to call on the House to declare that whoever should advise a dissolution would be guilty of high treason. A third gave utterance to a sentiment which it is difficult to understand how any assembly of civilised and Christian men, even in a moment of strong excitement, should have heard without horror. "They object to tacking; do they? Let them take care that they do not provoke us to tack in earnest. How would they like to have bills of supply with bills of attainder tacked to them?" This atrocious threat, worthy of the tribune of the French Convention in the worst days of the Jacobin tyranny, seems to have passed unreprehended. It was meant—such at least was the impression at the Dutch embassy—to intimidate Somers. He was confined by illness. He had been unable to take any public part in the proceedings of the Lords; and he had privately blamed them for engaging in a conflict in which he justly thought that they could not be victorious. Nevertheless, the Tory leaders hoped that they might be able to direct against him the whole force of the storm which they had raised. Seymour, in particular, encouraged by the wild and almost savage temper of his hearers, harangued with rancorous violence against the wisdom and the virtue which presented the strongest contrast to his own turbulence, insolence, faithlessness, and rapacity. No doubt, he said, the Lord Chancellor was a man of parts. Anybody might be glad to have for counsel doubt, because it occurred to Pomponne and Torcy that, with whatever approbation the English might listen to such language when uttered by a demagogue of their own race, they might be very differently affected by hearing it from a French diplomatist, and might think that there could not be a better reason for arming, than that Lewis and his emissaries earnestly wished them to disarm.

Tallard was instructed to gain, if possible, some members of the House of Commons. Everything, he was told, was now subjected to the scrutiny of that assembly: accounts of the public income, of the public expenditure, of the army, of the navy, were regularly laid on the table; and it would not be difficult to find persons who would supply the French legation with copious information on all these subjects.

The question of the Spanish succession was to be mentioned to William at a private audience. Tallard was fully informed of all that had passed in the conferences which the French ministers had held with Portland; and was furnished with all the arguments that the ingenuity of publicists could devise in favour of the claim of the Dauphin.

The French embassy made as magnificent an appearance in England as the English embassy had made in France. The mansion of the Duke of Ormond, one of the finest houses in Saint James's Square, was taken for Tallard. On the day of the public entry, all the streets from Tower Hill to Pall Mall were crowded with gazers who admired the painting and gilding of his Excellency's carriages, the surpassing beauty of his horses, and the multitude of his running footmen, dressed in gorgeous liveries of scarlet and golden lace. The Ambassador was graciously received at Kensington, and was invited to accompany William to Newmarket, where the largest and most splendid Spring Meeting ever known was about to assemble. The attraction must be supposed to have been great: for the meeting: the insecure state of the roads.

Newmarket

risks of the journey were not trifling. The peace had, all over Europe, and nowhere more than in England, turned crowds of old soldiers into marauders.* Several aristocratical equipages had been attacked even in Hyde Park. Every newspaper contained stories of travellers stripped, bound and flung into ditches. One day the Bristol mail was robbed; another day the Dover coach; then the Norwich waggon. On Hounslow Heath a company of horsemen, with masks on their faces, waited for the great people who had been to pay their court to the King at Windsor. Lord Ossulston escaped with the loss of two horses. The Duke of Saint Albans, with the help of his servants, beat off the assailants. His brother the Duke of Northumberland, less strongly guarded, fell into their hands. They succeeded in stopping thirty or forty coaches, and rode off with a great booty in guineas, watches and jewellery. Nowhere, however, does the peril seem to have been so great as on the Newmarket road. There indeed robbery was organised on a scale unparalleled in the kingdom since the days of Robin Hood and Little John. A fraternity of plunderers, thirty in number according to the lowest estimate, squatted, near Waltham Cross, under the shades of Epping Forest, and built themselves huts, from which they sallied forth with sword and pistol to bid passengers stand. The King and

* George Psalmanazar's account of the state of the south of France at this time is curious. On the high road near Lyons he frequently passed corpses fastened to posts. "These," he says, "were the bodies of highwaymen, or rather of soldiers, sailors, mariners, and even galley slaves, disbanded after the peace of Reswick, who, having neither home nor occupation, used to infest the roads in troops, plunder towns and villages, and, when taken, were hanged at the county town by dozens, or even scores sometimes, after which their bodies were thus exposed along the highway in terrorem."

Tallard were doubtless too well attended to be in jeopardy. But, soon after they had passed the dangerous spot, there was a fight on the highway attended with loss of life. A warrant of the Lord Chief Justice broke up the Maroon village for a short time: but the dispersed thieves soon mustered again, and had the impudence to bid defiance to the government in a cartel signed, it was said, with their real names. The civil power was unable to deal with this frightful evil. It was necessary that, during some time, cavalry should patrol every evening on the roads near the boundary between Middlesex and Essex.

The state of those roads, however, though contemporaries described it as dangerous beyond all example, did not deter men of rank and fashion from making the joyous pilgrimage to Newmarket. Half the Dukes in the kingdom were there. Most of the chief ministers of state swelled the crowd; nor was the opposition unrepresented. Montague stole two or three days from the Treasury, and Orford from the Admiralty. Godolphin was there, looking after his horses and his bets, and probably went away a richer man than he came. But racing was only one of the many amusements of that festive season. On fine mornings there was hunting. For those who preferred hawking choice falcons had been brought from Holland. On rainy days the cockpit was encircled by stars and blue ribands. On Sundays William went to church in state, and the most eminent divines of the neighbouring University of Cambridge preached before him. He omitted no opportunity of showing marked civility to Tallard. The Ambassador informed his Court that his place at table was next to the royal arm chair, and that his health had been most graciously drunk by the King.

All this time, both at Kensington and Newmarket, the Spanish question was the subject of constant and earnest discussion. To trace all the windings of the negotiation would be tedious. The general course which it took may easily be described. The object of William was to place the Electoral Prince of Bavaria on the Spanish throne. To obtain the consent of Lewis to such an arrangement seemed all but impossible; but William manœuvred with rare skill. Though he frankly acknowledged that he preferred the Electoral Prince to any other candidate, he professed himself desirous to meet, as far as he honourably or safely could, the wishes of the French King. There were conditions on which England and Holland might perhaps consent, though not without reluctance, that a son of the Dauphin should reign at Madrid, and should be master of the treasures of the New World. Those conditions were that the Milanese and the Two Sicilies should belong to the Archduke Charles, that the Elector of Bavaria should have the Spanish Netherlands, that Lewis should give up some fortified towns in Artois for the purpose of strengthening the barrier which protected the United Provinces, and that some important places both in the Mediterranean sea and in the Gulf of Mexico should be made over to the English and Dutch for the security of trade. Minorca and Havanna were mentioned as what might satisfy England.

Against these terms Lewis exclaimed loudly. Nobody, he said, who knew with how sensitive a jealousy the Spaniards watched every encroachment on their colonial empire would believe that they would ever consent to give up any part of that empire either to England or to Holland. The demand which was made upon himself was altogether inadmissible. A barrier was not less necessary to France than to Holland; and he never would break the iron chain of frontier fastnesses which was the defence of his own kingdom, even in order to purchase another kingdom for his grandson. On that subject he begged that he might hear no more. The proposition was one which he would not discuss, one to which he would not listen.

Further negotiations relating to the Spanish succession.

As William, however, resolutely maintained that the terms which he had offered, hard as they might seem, were the only terms on which England and Holland could suffer a Bourbon to reign at Madrid, Lewis began seriously to consider whether it might not be on the whole for his interest and that of his family rather to sell the Spanish crown dear than to buy it dear. He therefore now offered to withdraw his opposition to the Bavarian claim, provided a portion of the disputed inheritance were assigned to him in consideration of his disinterestedness and moderation. William was perfectly willing and even eager to treat on this basis. The first demands of Lewis were, as might have been expected, exorbitantly high. He asked for the kingdom of Navarre, which would have made him little less than master of the whole Iberian peninsula, and for the duchy of Luxemburg, which would have made him more dangerous than ever to the United Provinces. On both points he encountered a steady resistance. The impression which, throughout these transactions, the firmness and good faith of William made on Tallard is remarkable. At first the dexterous and keen witted Frenchman was all suspicion. He imagined that there was an evasion in every phrase, a hidden snare in every offer. But after a time he began to discover that he had to do with a man far too wise to be false. "The King of England," he wrote, and it is impossible to doubt that he wrote what he thought, "acts with good faith in everything. His way of dealing is upright and sincere."*

* "Il est de bonne foi dans est droit et sincère." Tallard to tout ce qu'il fait. Son procédé Lewis, July 3, 1698.

"The King of England," he wrote a few days later, "has hitherto acted with great sincerity; and I venture to say that, if he once enters into a treaty, he will steadily adhere to it." But in the same letter the Ambassador thought it necessary to hint to his master that the diplomatic chicanery which might be useful in other negotiations would be all thrown away here. "I must venture to observe to Your Majesty that the King of England is very sharp-sighted, that his judgment is sound, and that, if we try to spin the negotiation out, he will very soon perceive that we are trifling with him." *

During some time projects and counterprojects continued to pass and repass between Kensington and Versailles. Something was conceded on both sides; and when the session of Parliament ended there seemed to be fair hopes of a settlement. And now the scene of the negotiation was again changed. Having been shifted from France to England, it was shifted from England to Holland. As soon as William had prorogued the Houses, he was impatient to be again in his native land. He felt all the glee of a schoolboy who is leaving harsh masters and quarrelsome comrades to pass the Christmas holidays at a happy home. That stern and composed face which had been the same in the pursuit at the Boyne and in the rout at Landen, and of which the keenest politicians had in vain tried to read the secrets, now wore an expression but too intelligible. The English were not a little provoked by seeing their King so happy. Hitherto his annual visits to the Continent had been not only pardoned but approved. It was necessary that he

The King goes to Holland.

* "Le Roi d'Angleterre, Sire, va très sincèrement jusqu'à présent; et j'ose dire que s'il entre une fois en traité avec Votre Majesté, il le tiendra de bonne foi."

—"Si je l'ose dire à V. M., il est très pénétrant, et a l'esprit juste. Il s'apercevra bientôt qu'on barguigne si les choses traînent trop de long." July 8.

should be at the head of his army. If he had left his people, it had been in order to put his life in jeopardy for their independence, their liberty, and their religion. But they had hoped that, when peace had been restored, when no call of duty required him to cross the sea, he would generally, during the summer and autumn, reside in his fair palaces and parks on the banks of the Thames, or travel from country seat to country seat, and from cathedral town to cathedral town, making himself acquainted with every shire of his realm, and giving his hand to be kissed by multitudes of squires, clergymen and aldermen who were not likely ever to see him unless he came among them. It now appeared that he was sick of the noble residences which had descended to him from ancient princes; that he was sick even of those mansions which the liberality of Parliament had enabled him to build and embellish according to his own taste; that he was sick of Windsor, of Richmond, and of Hampton; that he promised himself no enjoyment from a progress through those flourishing and populous counties which he had never seen, Yorkshire and Norfolk, Cheshire, Shropshire and Worcestershire. While he was forced to be with us he was weary of us, pining for his home, counting the hours to the prorogation. As soon as the passing of the last bill of supply had set him at liberty, he turned his back on his English subjects: he hastened to his seat in Guelders, where, during some months, he might be free from the annoyance of seeing English faces and hearing English words; and he would with difficulty tear himself away from his favourite spot when it became absolutely necessary that he should again ask for English money.

Thus his subjects murmured; but, in spite of their murmurs, he set off in high spirits. It had been arranged that Tallard should speedily follow him, and that the discussion in which they had Ministers who were supposed to have great influence in the closet had vainly tried to overcome the dislike with which their master regarded the Churchills. It was not till he had been some time reconciled to his sister in law that he ceased to regard her two favourite servants as his enemies. So late as the year 1696 he had been heard to say, "If I had been a private gentleman, my Lord Marlborough and I must have measured swords." All these things were now, it seemed, forgotten. The Duke of Gloucester's household had just been arranged. As he was not yet nine years old, and the civil list was burdened with a heavy debt, fifteen thousand pounds was thought for the present a sufficient provision. The child's literary education was directed by Burnet, with the title of Preceptor. Marlborough was appointed Governor; and the London Gazette announced his appointment, not with official dryness, but in the fervid language of panegyric. He was at the same time again sworn a member of the Privy Council from which he had been expelled with ignominy; and he was honoured a few days later with a still higher mark of the King's confidence, a seat at the board of Regency.

Some persons imagined that they saw in this strange reconciliation a sign that the influence of Portland was on the wane, and that the influence of Albemarle was growing. For Marlborough had been many years at feud with Portland, and had even — a rare event indeed — been so much irritated as to speak of Portland in coarse and ungentlemanlike terms. With Albemarle, on the other hand, Marlborough had studiously ingratiated himself by all the arts which a mind singularly observant and sagacious could learn from a long experience in courts; and it is possible that Albemarle may have removed some difficulties. It is hardly necessary, however, to resort to that supposition for the purpose of explaining why so wise a man as William forced himself, after some delay caused by very just and natural resentment, to act wisely. His opinion of Marlborough's character was probably unaltered. But he could not help perceiving that Marlborough's situation was widely different from what it had been a few years before. That very ambition, that very avarice, which had, in former times, impelled him to betray two masters, were now sufficient securities for his fidelity to the order of things which had been established by the Bill of Rights. If that order of things could be maintained inviolate, he could scarcely fail to be, in a few years, the greatest and wealthiest subject in Europe. His military and political talents might therefore now be used without any apprehension that they would be turned against the government which used them. It is to be remembered too that he derived his importance less from his military and political talents, great as they were, than from the dominion which, through the instrumentality of his wife, he exercised over the mind of the Princess. While he was on good terms with the Court it was certain that she would lend no countenance to any cabal which might attack either the title or the prerogatives of her brother in law. Confident that from this quarter, a quarter once the darkest and most stormy in the whole political horizon, nothing but sunshine and calm was now to be expected, William set out cheerfully on his expedition to his native country.

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B.'s, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper government. The first great contest was in Westminster. It must be remembered that

The elections.

Westminster was then by far the greatest city in the island, except only the neighbouring city of London, and contained more than three times as large a population as Bristol or Norwich, which came next in size. The right of voting at Westminster was in the householders paying scot and lot; and the householders paying scot and lot were many thousands. It is also to be observed that their political education was much further advanced than that of the great majority of the electors of the kingdom. A burgess in a country town, or a forty shilling freeholder in an agricultural district, then knew little about public affairs except what he could learn from reading the Postman at the alehouse, and from hearing, on the 30th of January, the 29th of May or the 5th of November, a sermon in which questions of state were discussed with more zeal than sense. But the citizen of Westminster passed his days in the vicinity of the palace, of the public offices, of the houses of parliament, of the courts of law. He was familiar with the faces and voices of ministers, senators and judges. In anxious times he walked in the great Hall to pick up news. When there was an important trial, he looked into the Court of King's Bench, and heard Cowper and Harcourt contending, and Holt moderating between them. When there was an interesting debate in the House of Commons, he could at least squeeze himself into the lobby or the Court of Requests, and hear who had spoken and how, and what were the numbers on the division. He lived in a region of coffeehouses, of booksellers' shops, of clubs, of pamphlets, of newspapers, of theatres where poignant allusions to the most exciting questions of the day perpetually called forth applause and hisses, of pulpits where the doctrines of the High Churchman, of the Low Churchman, of the Nonjuror, of the Nonconformist, were explained and defended every Sunday by the most eloquent and learned divines of every persuasion. At that time, therefore, the metropolitan electors were, as a class, decidedly superior in intelligence and knowledge to the provincial electors.

Montague and Secretary Vernon were the ministerial candidates for Westminster. They were opposed by Sir Henry Colt, a dull, surly, stubborn professor of patriotism, who tired everybody to death with his endless railing at standing armies and placemen. The electors were summoned to meet on an open space just out of the streets. The first Lord of the Treasury and the Secretary of State appeared at the head of three thousand horsemen. Colt's followers were almost all on foot. He was a favourite with the keepers of pothouses, and had enlisted a strong body of porters and chairmen. The two parties, after exchanging a good deal of abuse, came to blows. The adherents of the ministers were victorious, put the adverse mob to the rout, and cudgelled Colt himself into a muddy ditch. The poll was taken in Westminster Hall. From the first there was no doubt of the result. But Colt tried to prolong the contest by bringing up a voter an hour. When it became clear that this artifice was employed for the purpose of causing delay, the returning officer took on himself the responsibility of closing the books, and of declaring Montague and Vernon duly elected.

At Guildhall the Junto was less fortunate. Three ministerial aldermen were returned. But the fourth member, Sir John Fleet, was not only a Tory, but was Governor of the old East India Company, and had distinguished himself by the pertinacity with which he had opposed the financial and commercial policy of the first Lord of the Treasury. While Montague suffered the mortification of finding that containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B's, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the times repeated, that the English and Dutch Governments, in making this covenant with France, were guilty of a violation of plighted faith. They had, it was affirmed, by a secret article of a Treaty of Alliance concluded in 1689, bound themselves to support the pretensions of the Emperor to the Spanish throne; and they now, in direct defiance of that article, agreed to an arrangement by which he was excluded from the Spanish throne. The truth is that the secret article will not, whether construed according to the letter or according to the spirit, bear the sense which has generally been put upon it. The stipulations of that article were introduced by a preamble, in which it was set forth that the Dauphin was preparing to assert by arms his claim to the great heritage which his mother had renounced, and that there was reason to believe that he also aspired to the dignity of King of the Romans. For these reasons, England and the States General, considering the evil consequences which must follow if he should succeed in attaining either of his objects, promised to support with all their power his Cæsarean Majesty against the French and their adherents. Surely we cannot reasonably interpret this engagement to mean that, when the dangers mentioned in the preamble had ceased to exist, when the eldest Archduke was King of the Romans, and when the Dauphin had, for the sake of peace, withdrawn his claim to the Spanish Crown, England and the United Provinces would be bound to go to war for the purpose of supporting the cause of the Emperor, not against the French but against his own grandson, against the only prince who could reign at Madrid without exciting fear and jealousy throughout all Christendom.

While some persons accused William of breaking faith with the House of Austria, others accused him of interfering unjustly in the internal affairs of Spain. In the most ingenious and humorous political satire

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the Naples and Sicily formed indeed a noble kingdom, fertile, populous, blessed with a delicious climate, and excellently situated for trade. Such a kingdom, had it been contiguous to Provence, would indeed have been a most formidable addition to the French monarchy. But a glance at the map ought to have been sufficient to undeceive those who imagined that the great antagonist of the House of Bourbon could be so weak as to lay the liberties of Europe at the feet of that house. A King of France would, by acquiring territories in the south of Italy, have really bound himself over to keep the peace; for, as soon as he was at war with his neighbours, those territories were certain to be worse than useless to him. They were hostages at the mercy of his enemies. It would be easy to attack them. It would be hardly possible to defend them. A French army sent to them by land would have to force its way through the passes of the Alps, through Piedmont, through Tuscany, and through the Pontifical States, in opposition probably to great German armies. A French fleet would run great risk of being intercepted and destroyed by the squadrons of England and Holland. Of all this Lewis was perfectly aware. He repeatedly declared that he should consider the kingdom of the Two Sicilies as a source, not of strength, but of weakness. He accepted it at last with murmurs: he seems to have intended to make it over to one of his younger grandsons; and he would beyond all doubt have gladly given it in exchange for a thirtieth part of the same area in the Netherlands.* But in the Netherlands England and

* I will quote from the despatches of Lewis to Tallard three or four passages which show that the value of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies was quite justly appreciated at Versailles. "À l'égard du royaume de Naples et de Sicile le roi d'Angleterre objectera que les places de ces états entre mes mains me rendront maître du commerce de la Méditerranée. Vous pourrez en ce cas laisser entendre, comme de vous même, qu'il serait si difficile

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the

so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B.'s, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the about which Somers delicately hinted that he and his colleagues felt some misgivings. They had their fears that Lewis might be playing false. They had their fears also that, possessed of Sicily, he would be master of the trade of the Levant; and that, possessed of Guipuscoa, he would be able at any moment to push an army into the heart of Castile. But they had been reassured by the thought that their sovereign thoroughly understood this department of politics, that he had fully considered all these things, that he had neglected no precaution, and that the concessions which he had made to France were the smallest which could have averted the calamities impending over Christendom. It was added that the service which His Majesty had rendered to the House of Bavaria gave him a right to ask for some return. Would it be too much to expect, from the gratitude of the prince who was soon to be a great king, some relaxation of the rigorous system which excluded the English trade from the Spanish colonies? Such a relaxation would greatly endear His Majesty to his subjects.

With these suggestions the Chancellor sent off the powers which the King wanted. They were drawn up by Vernon with his own hand, and sealed in such a manner, that no subordinate officer was let into the secret. Blanks were left, as the King had directed, for the names of two Commissioners. But Somers gently hinted that it would be proper to fill those blanks with the names of persons who were English by naturalisation, if not by birth, and who would therefore be responsible to Parliament.

The King now had what he wanted from England. The peculiarity of the Batavian polity threw some difficulties in his way: but every difficulty yielded to his authority and to the dexterous management of Heinsius. And in truth the treaty could not but be favourably regarded by the States General; for it containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the power to facilitate the execution of the Treaty of Partition. He was indeed bound by the strongest ties to the confederates of Loo. They had, by a secret article, added to the treaty, agreed that, if the Electoral Prince should become King of Spain, and then die without issue, his father should be his heir. The news that young Francis Joseph had been declared heir to the throne of Spain was welcome to all the Potentates of Europe with the single exception of his grandfather the Emperor. The vexation and indignation of Leopold were extreme. But there could be no doubt that, graciously or ungraciously, he would submit. It would have been madness in him to contend against all Western Europe on land; and it was physically impossible for him to wage war on the sea. William was therefore able to indulge, during some weeks, the pleasing belief that he had by skill and firmness averted from the civilised world a general war which had lately seemed to be imminent, and that he had secured the great community of nations against the undue predominance of one too powerful member.

But the pleasure and the pride with which he contemplated the success of his foreign policy gave place to very different feelings, as soon as he again had to deal with our domestic factions. And, indeed, those who most revere his memory, must acknowledge that, in dealing with these factions, he did not, at this time, show his wonted statesmanship. For a wise man, he seems never to have been sufficiently aware how much offence is given by discourtesy in small things. His ministers had apprised him that the result of the elections had been unsatisfactory, and that the temper of the new representatives of the people would require much management. Unfortunately he did not lay this intimation to heart. He had by proclamation fixed the opening of the Parliament for the 29th of November. This was then considered as a very containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

Domestic discontent.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the

so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B.'s, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B.'s, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the speech into consideration. The House resolved itself into a Committee. The great question was instantly raised; What provision should be made for the defence of the realm? It was naturally expected that the confidential advisers of the Crown would propose something. As they remained silent, Harley took the lead which properly belonged to them, and moved that the army should not exceed seven thousand men. Sir Charles Sedley suggested ten thousand. Vernon, who was present, was of opinion that this number would have been carried if it had been proposed by one who was known to speak on behalf of the King. But few members cared to support an amendment which was certain to be less pleasing to their constituents, and did not appear to be more pleasing to the Court, than the original motion. Harley's resolution passed the Committee. On the morrow it was reported and approved. The House also resolved that all the seven thousand men who were to be retained should be natural born English subjects. Other votes were carried without a single division either in the Committee or when the mace was on the table.

The King's indignation and vexation were extreme. He was angry with the opposition, with the ministers, with all England. The nation seemed to him to be under a judicial infatuation, blind to dangers which his sagacity perceived to be real, near and formidable, and morbidly apprehensive of dangers which his conscience told him were no dangers at all. The perverse islanders were willing to trust everything that was most precious to them, their independence, their property, their laws, their religion, to the moderation and good faith of France, to the winds and the waves, to the steadiness and expertness of battalions of ploughmen commanded by squires; and yet they were afraid to trust him with the means of protecting them lest he should use those means for

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B.'s, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the wishes, and that they should be at the same time frowned upon at Kensington for not going farther. The King was not to be moved. He had been too great to sink into littleness without a struggle. He had been the soul of two great coalitions, the dread of France, the hope of all oppressed nations. And was he to be degraded into a mere puppet of the Harleys and the Howes, a petty prince who could neither help nor hurt, a less formidable enemy and less valuable ally than the Elector of Brandenburg or the Duke of Savoy? His spirit, quite as arbitrary and impatient of control as that of any of his predecessors, Stuart, Tudor or Plantagenet, swelled high against this ignominious bondage. It was well known at Versailles that he was cruelly mortified and incensed; and, during a short time, a strange hope was cherished there that, in the heat of his resentment, he might be induced to imitate his uncles, Charles and James, to conclude another treaty of Dover, and to sell himself into vassalage for a subsidy which might make him independent of his niggardly and mutinous Parliament. Such a subsidy, it was thought, might be disguised under the name of a compensation for the little principality of Orange which Lewis had long been desirous to purchase even at a fancy price. A despatch was drawn up containing a paragraph by which Tallard was to be apprised of his master's views, and instructed not to hazard any distinct proposition, but to try the effect of cautious and delicate insinuations, and, if possible, to draw William on to speak first. This paragraph was, on second thoughts, cancelled; but that it should ever have been written must be considered a most significant circumstance.

It may with confidence be affirmed that William would never have stooped to be the pensioner of France: but it was with difficulty that he was, at this conjuncture, dissuaded from throwing up the

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the capacity for the conduct of great affairs, been elevated to the highest dignities, in spite of the murmurs of the whole nation, by the mere partiality of the Sovereign. Montague owed everything to his own merit and to the public opinion of his merit. With his master he appears to have had very little intercourse, and none that was not official. He was in truth a living monument of what the Revolution had done for the Country. The Revolution had found him a young student in a cell by the Cam, poring on the diagrams which illustrated the newly discovered laws of centripetal and centrifugal force, writing little copies of verses, and indulging visions of parsonages with rich glebes, and of closes in old cathedral towns; had developed in him new talents; had held out to him the hope of prizes of a very different sort from a rectory or a prebend. His eloquence had gained for him the ear of the legislature. His skill in fiscal and commercial affairs had won for him the confidence of the City. During four years he had been the undisputed leader of the majority of the House of Commons; and every one of those years he had made memorable by great parliamentary victories, and by great public services. It should seem that his success ought to have been gratifying to the nation, and especially to that assembly of which he was the chief ornament, of which indeed he might be called the creature. The representatives of the people ought to have been well pleased to find that their approbation could, in the new order of things, do for the man whom they delighted to honour all that the mightiest of the Tudors could do for Leicester, or the most arbitrary of the Stuarts for Strafford. But, strange to say, the Commons soon began to regard with an evil eye that greatness which was their own work. The fault indeed was partly Montague's. With all his ability, he had not the wisdom to avert, by suavity and moderation, that curse, the inseparable concomitant of prosperity and glory, which the ancients personified under the name of Nemesis. His head, strong for all the purposes of debate and arithmetical calculation, was weak against the intoxicating influence of success and fame. He became proud even to insolence. Old companions, who, a very few years before, had punned and rhymed with him in garrets, had dined with him at cheap ordinaries, had sate with him in the pit, and had lent him some silver to pay his seamstress's bill, hardly knew their friend Charles in the great man who could not forget for one moment that he was First Lord of the Treasury, that he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, that he had been a Regent of the kingdom, that he had founded the Bank of England and the new East India Company, that he had restored the currency, that he had invented the Exchequer Bills, that he had planned the General Mortgage, and that he had been pronounced, by a solemn vote of the Commons, to have deserved all the favours which he had received from the Crown. It was said that admiration of himself and contempt of others were indicated by all his gestures and written in all the lines of his face. The very way in which the little jackanapes, as the hostile pamphleteers loved to call him, strutted through the lobby, making the most of his small figure, rising on his toe, and perking up his chin, made him enemies. Rash and arrogant sayings were imputed to him, and perhaps invented for him. He was accused of boasting that there was nothing that he could not carry through the House of Commons, that he could turn the majority round his finger. A crowd of libellers assailed him with much more than political hatred. Boundless rapacity and corruption were laid to his charge. He was represented as selling all the places in the revenue department for three years' purchase. The opprobrious nickname of Filcher was fastened on him. His luxury, it was said, was not less inordinate than his avarice. There was indeed an attempt made at this time to raise against the leading Whig politicians and their allies, the great moneyed men of the City, a cry much resembling the cry which, seventy or eighty years later, was raised against the English Nabobs. Great wealth, suddenly acquired, is not often enjoyed with moderation, dignity and good taste. It is therefore not impossible that there may have been some small foundation for the extravagant stories with which malecontent pamphleteers amused the leisure of malecontent squires. In such stories Montague played a conspicuous part. He contrived, it was said, to be at once as rich as Crassus and as riotous as Mark Antony. His stud and his cellar were beyond all price. His very lacqueys turned up their noses at claret. He and his confederates were described as spending the immense sums of which they had plundered the public in banquets of four courses, such as Lucullus might have eaten in the Hall of Apollo. A supper for twelve Whigs, enriched by jobs, grants, bribes, lucky purchases and lucky sales of stock, was cheap at eighty pounds. At the end of every course all the fine linen on the table was changed. Those who saw the pyramids of choice wild fowl imagined that the entertainment had been prepared for fifty epicures at the least. Only six birds' nests from the Nicobar islands were to be had in London: and all the six, bought at an enormous price, were smoking in soup on the board. These fables were destitute alike of probability and of evidence. But Grub Street could devise no fable injurious to Montague which was not certain to find credence in more than half the manor houses and vicarages of England.

It may seem strange that a man who loved literature passionately, and rewarded literary merit munificently, should have been more savagely reviled both in prose and verse than almost any other politician in our history. But there is really no cause for wonder. A powerful, liberal and discerning protector of genius is very likely to be mentioned with honour long after his death, but is very likely also to be most brutally libelled during his life. In every age there will be twenty bad writers for one good one; and every bad writer will think himself a good one. A ruler who neglects all men of letters alike does not wound the self love of any man of letters. But a ruler who shows favour to the few men of letters who deserve it inflicts on the many the miseries of disappointed hope, of affronted pride, of jealousy cruel as the grave. All the rage of a multitude of authors, irritated at once by the sting of want and by the sting of vanity, is directed against the unfortunate patron. It is true that the thanks and eulogies of those whom he has befriended will be remembered when the invectives of those whom he has neglected are forgotten. But in his own time the obloquy will probably make as much noise and find as much credit as the panegyric. The name of Mæcenas has been made immortal by Horace and Virgil, and is popularly used to designate an accomplished statesman, who lives in close intimacy with the greatest poets and wits of his time, and heaps benefits on them with the most delicate generosity. But it may well be suspected that, if the verses of Alpinus and Fannius, of Bavius and Mævius, had come down to us, we might see Mæcenas represented as the most niggardly and tasteless of human beings, nay as a man who, on system, neglected and persecuted all intellectual superiority. It is certain that Montague was thus represented by contemporary scribblers. They told the world in essays, in letters, in dialogues, in ballads, that he would do nothing for anybody without being paid either in money or in some vile services; that he not only never rewarded merit, but hated it whenever he saw it; that he practised the meanest arts for the purpose of depressing it; that those whom he protected and enriched were not men of ability and virtue, but wretches distinguished only by their sycophancy and their low debaucheries. And this was said of the man who made the fortune of Joseph Addison, and of Isaac Newton.

Nothing had done more to diminish the influence of Montague in the House of Commons than a step which he had taken a few weeks before the meeting of the Parliament. It would seem that the result of the general election had made him uneasy, and that he had looked anxiously round him for some harbour in which he might take refuge from the storms which seemed to be gathering. While his thoughts were thus employed, he learned that the Auditorship of the Exchequer had suddenly become vacant. The Auditorship was held for life. The duties were formal and easy; the gains were uncertain: for they rose and fell with the public expenditure: but they could hardly, in time of peace, and under the most economical administration, be less than four thousand pounds a year, and were likely, in time of war, to be more than double of that sum. Montague marked this great office for his own. He could not indeed take it, while he continued to be in charge of the public purse. For it would have been indecent, and perhaps illegal, that he should audit his own accounts. He therefore selected his brother Christopher, whom he had lately made a Commissioner of the Excise, to keep the place for him. There was, as may easily be supposed, no want of powerful and noble competitors for such a prize. Leeds had, more than twenty years before, obtained from Charles the Second a patent granting the reversion to Caermarthen. Godolphin, it was said, pleaded a promise made by William. But Montague maintained, and was, it seems, right in maintaining, that both the patent of Charles and the promise of William had been given under a mistake, and that the right of appointing the Auditor belonged, not to the Crown, but to the Board of Treasury. He carried his point with characteristic audacity and celerity. The news of the vacancy reached London on a Sunday. On the Tuesday the new Auditor was sworn in. The ministers were amazed. Even the Chancellor, with whom Montague was on terms of intimate friendship, had not been consulted. Godolphin devoured his ill temper. Caermarthen ordered out his wonderful yacht, and hastened to complain to the King, who was then at Loo. But what had been done could not be undone.

This bold stroke placed Montague's fortune, in the lower sense of the word, out of hazard, but increased the animosity of his enemies and cooled the zeal of his adherents. In a letter written by one of his colleagues, Secretary Vernon, on the day after the appointment, the Auditorship is described as at once a safe and lucrative place. "But I thought," Vernon proceeds, "Mr. Montague was too aspiring to stoop to anything below the height he was in, and that he least considered profit." This feeling was no doubt shared by many of the friends of the ministry. It was plain that Montague was preparing a retreat for himself. This flinching of the captain, just on the eve of a perilous campaign, naturally disheartened the whole army. It deserves to be remarked that, more than eighty years later, another great parliamentary leader was placed in a very similar situation. The younger William Pitt held in 1784 the same offices which Montague had held in 1698. Pitt was pressed in 1784 by political difficulties not less than those with which Montague had contended in 1698. Pitt was also in 1784 a much poorer man than Montague in 1698. Pitt, in 1784, like Montague in 1698, had at his own absolute disposal a lucrative sinecure place in the Exchequer. Pitt gave away the office which would have made him an opulent man, and gave it away in such a manner as at once to reward unfortunate merit, and to relieve the country from a burden. For this disinterestedness he was repaid by the enthusiastic applause of his followers, by the enforced respect of his opponents, and by the confidence which, through all the vicissitudes of a chequered and at length disastrous career, the great body of Englishmen reposed in his public spirit and in his personal integrity. In the intellectual qualities of a statesman Montague was probably not inferior to Pitt. But the magnanimity, the dauntless courage, the contempt for riches and for baubles, to which, more than to any intellectual quality, Pitt owed his long ascendancy, were wanting to Montague.

The faults of Montague were great; but his punishment was cruel. It was indeed a punishment which must have been more bitter than the bitterness of death to a man whose vanity was exquisitely sensitive, and who had been spoiled by early and rapid success and by constant prosperity. Before the new Parliament had been a month sitting it was plain that his empire was at an end. He spoke with the old eloquence; but his speeches no longer called forth the old response. Whatever he proposed was maliciously scrutinised. The success of his budget of the preceding year had surpassed all expectation. The two millions which he had undertaken to find had been raised with a rapidity which seemed magical. Yet for bringing the riches of the City, in an unprecedented flood, to overflow the Exchequer he was reviled as if his scheme had failed more ludicrously than the Tory Land Bank. Emboldened by his unpopularity, the Old East India Company presented a petition praying that the General Society Act, which his influence and eloquence had induced the late Parliament to pass, might be extensively modified. Howe took the matter up. It was moved that leave should be given to bring in a bill according to the prayer of the petition; the motion was carried by a hundred and seventy five votes to a hundred and forty eight; and the whole question of the trade with the Eastern seas was reopened. The bill was brought in, but was, with great difficulty and by a very small majority, thrown out on the second reading.* On other financial questions Montague, so lately the oracle of the Committee of Supply, was now heard with malevolent distrust. If his enemies were unable to detect any flaw in his reasonings and calculations, they could at least whisper that Mr. Montague was very cunning, that it was not easy to track him, but that it might be taken for granted that for whatever he did he had some sinister motive, and that the safest course was to negative whatever he proposed. Though that House of Commons was economical even to a vice, the majority preferred paying high interest to paying low interest, solely because the plan for raising money at low interest had been framed by him. In a despatch from the Dutch Embassy the States General were informed that many of the votes of that session which had caused astonishment out of doors were to be ascribed to nothing but to the bitter envy which the ability and fame of Montague had excited. It was not without a hard struggle and a sharp pang that the first Englishman who has held that high position which has now been long called the Leadership of the House of Commons submitted to be deposed. But he was set upon with cowardly malignity by whole rows of small men none of whom singly would have dared to look him in the face. A contemporary pamphleteer compared him to an owl in the sunshine pursued and pecked to death by flights of tiny birds. On one occasion he was irritated into uttering an oath. Then there was a cry of order; and he was threatened with the Serjeant and the Tower. On another occasion he was moved even to shedding tears of rage and vexation, tears which only moved the mockery of his low minded and bad hearted foes.

* Commons' Journals, February 24. 27. ; March 9. 1695. In the Vernon Correspondence a letter about the East India question which belongs to the year 1692 is put under the date of Feb.

10. 1695. The truth is that this most valuable correspondence cannot be used to good purpose by any writer who does not do for himself all that the editor ought to have done.

If a minister were now to find himself thus situated in a House of Commons which had just been elected, and from which it would therefore be idle to appeal to the electors, he would instantly resign his office, and his adversaries would take his place. The change would be most advantageous to the public, even if we suppose his successor to be both less virtuous and less able than himself. For it is much better for the country to have a bad ministry, than to have no ministry at all; and there would be no ministry at all if the executive departments were filled by men whom the representatives of the people took every opportunity of thwarting and insulting. That an unprincipled man should be followed by a majority of the House of Commons is no doubt an evil. But, when this is the case, he will nowhere be so harmless as at the head of affairs. As he already possesses the power to do boundless mischief, it is desirable to give him a strong motive to abstain from doing mischief; and such a motive he has from the moment that he is entrusted with the administration. Office of itself does much to equalise politicians. It by no means brings all characters to a level; but it does bring high characters down and low characters up towards a common standard. In power the most patriotic and most enlightened states-

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B's, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the so acute and eloquent an advocate. But a very good advocate might be a very bad minister; and, of all the ministers who had brought the kingdom into difficulties, this plausible fair-spoken person was the most dangerous. Nor was the old reprobate ashamed to add that he was afraid that his Lordship was no better than a Hobbist in religion.

After a long sitting the members separated; but they reassembled early on the morning of the following day, Tuesday the ninth of April. A conference was held; and Seymour, as chief manager for the Commons, returned the bill and the amendments to the Peers in the manner which had been prescribed to him. From the Painted Chamber he went back to the Lower House, and reported what had passed. "If," he said, "I may venture to judge by the looks and manner of their Lordships, all will go right." But within half an hour evil tidings came through the Court of Requests and the lobbies. The Lords had divided on the question whether they would adhere to their amendments. Forty seven had voted for adhering, and thirty four for giving way. The House of Commons broke up with gloomy looks, and in great agitation. All London looked forward to the next day with painful forebodings. The general feeling was in favour of the bill. It was rumoured that the majority which had determined to stand by the amendments had been swollen by several prelates, by several of the illegitimate sons of Charles the Second, and by several needy and greedy courtiers. The cry in all the public places of resort was that the nation would be ruined by the three B's, Bishops, Bastards, and Beggars. On Wednesday the tenth, at length, the contest came to a decisive issue. Both Houses were early crowded. The Lords demanded a conference. It was held; and Pembroke delivered back to Seymour the bill and the amendments, together with a paper

containing a concise, but luminous and forcible, exposition of the grounds on which the Lords conceived themselves to be acting in a constitutional and strictly defensive manner. This paper was read at the bar: but, whatever effect it may now produce on a dispassionate student of history, it produced none on the thick ranks of country gentlemen. It was instantly resolved that the bill should again be sent back to the Lords with a peremptory announcement that the Commons' determination was unalterable.

The Lords again took the amendments into consideration. During the last forty eight hours, great exertions had been made in various quarters to avert a complete rupture between the Houses. The statesmen of the Junto were far too wise not to see that it would be madness to continue the struggle longer. It was indeed necessary, unless the King and the Lords were to be of as little weight in the state as in 1648, unless the House of Commons was not merely to exercise a general control over the government, but to be, as in the days of the Rump, itself the whole government, the sole legislative chamber, the fountain from which were to flow all those favours which had hitherto been in the gift of the Crown, that a determined stand should be made. But, in order that such a stand might be successful, the ground must be carefully selected; for a defeat might be fatal. The Lords must wait for some occasion on which their privileges would be bound up with the privileges of all Englishmen, for some occasion on which the constituent bodies would, if an appeal were made to them, disavow the acts of the representative body; and this was not such an occasion. The enlightened and large minded few considered tacking as a practice so pernicious that it would be justified only by an emergency which would justify a resort to physical force. But, in the many, tacking, when employed for a popular end, excited little or no disapprobation. The public, which seldom troubles itself with nice distinctions, could not be made to understand that the question at issue was any other than this, whether a sum which was vulgarly estimated at millions, and which undoubtedly amounted to some hundreds of thousands, should be employed in paying the debts of the state and alleviating the load of taxation, or in making Dutchmen, who were already too rich, still richer. It was evident that on that question the Lords could not hope to have the country with them, and that, if a general election took place while that question was unsettled, the new House of Commons would be even more mutinous and impracticable than the present House. Somers, in his sick chamber, had given this opinion. Orford had voted for the bill in every stage. Montague, though no longer a minister, had obtained admission to the royal closet, and had strongly represented to the King the dangers which threatened the state. The King had at length consented to let it be understood that he considered the passing of the bill as on the whole the less of two great evils. It was soon clear that the temper of the Peers had undergone a considerable alteration since the preceding day. Scarcely any, indeed, changed sides. But not a few abstained from voting. Wharton, who had at first spoken powerfully for the amendments, left town for Newmarket. On the other hand, some Lords who had not yet taken their part came down to give a healing vote. Among them were the two persons to whom the education of the young heir apparent had been entrusted, Marlborough and Burnet. Marlborough showed his usual prudence. He had remained neutral while by taking a part he must have offended either the House of Commons or the King. He took a part as soon as he saw that it was possible to please both. Burnet, alarmed for the public peace, was in a state of great excitement, and, as was usual with him when in such a state, forgot dignity and decorum, called out "stuff" in a very audible voice while a noble lord was haranguing in favour of the amendments, and was in great danger of being reprimanded at the bar or delivered over to Black Rod. The motion on which the division took place was that the House do adhere to the amendments. There were forty contents and thirty seven not contents. Proxies were called; and the numbers were found to be exactly even. In the House of Lords there is no casting vote. When the numbers are even, the non contents have it. The motion to adhere had therefore been negatived. But this was not enough. It was necessary that an affirmative resolution should be moved to the effect that the House agreed to the bill without amendments; and, if the numbers should again be equal, this motion would also be lost. It was an anxious moment. Fortunately the Primate's heart failed him. He had obstinately fought the battle down to the last stage. But he probably felt that it was no light thing to take on himself, and to bring on his order, the responsibility of throwing the whole kingdom into confusion. He started up and hurried out of the House, beckoning to some of his brethren. His brethren followed him with a prompt obedience, which, serious as the crisis was, caused no small merriment. In consequence of this defection, the motion to agree was carried by a majority of five. Meanwhile the members of the other House had been impatiently waiting for news, and had been alternately elated and depressed by the reports which followed one another in rapid succession. At first it was confidently expected that the Peers would yield; and there was general good humour. Then came intelligence that the majority of the Lords present had voted for adhering to the amendments. "I believe," so Vernon wrote the next day, "I believe there was not one man in the House that did not think the nation ruined." The lobbies were cleared: the back doors were locked: the keys were laid on the table: the Serjeant at Arms was directed to take his post at the front door, and to suffer no member to withdraw. An awful interval followed, during which the angry passions of the assembly seemed to be subdued by terror. Some of the leaders of the opposition, men of grave character and of large property, stood aghast at finding that they were engaged, — they scarcely knew how, — in a conflict such as they had not at all expected, in a conflict in which they could be victorious only at the expense of the peace and order of society. Even Seymour was sobered by the greatness and nearness of the danger. Even Howe thought it advisable to hold conciliatory language. It was no time, he said, for wrangling. Court party and country party were Englishmen alike. Their duty was to forget all past grievances, and to cooperate heartily for the purpose of saving the country.

In a moment all was changed. A message from the Lords was announced. It was a message which lightened many heavy hearts. The bill had been passed without amendments.

The leading malecontents, who, a few minutes before, scared by finding that their violence had brought on a crisis for which they were not prepared, had talked about the duty of mutual forgiveness and close union, instantly became again as rancorous as ever. One danger, they said, was over. So far well. But it was the duty of the representatives of the people to take such steps as might make it impossible that there should ever again be such danger. Every adviser of the Crown, who had been concerned in the procuring or passing of any exorbitant grant, ought to be ex-

Somers again
attacked.

dom, and asked of them an additional number of English troops, it is not improbable that he might have carried his point; it is certain that, if he had failed, there would have been nothing ignominious in his failure. Unhappily, instead of raising a great public question, on which he was in the right, on which he had a good chance of succeeding, and on which he might have been defeated without any loss of dignity, he chose to raise a personal question, on which he was in the wrong, on which, right or wrong, he was sure to be beaten, and on which he could not be beaten without being degraded. Instead of pressing for more English regiments, he exerted all his influence to obtain for the Dutch guards permission to remain in the island.

The first trial of strength was in the Upper House.

Renewed discussion of the army question.

A resolution was moved there to the effect that the Lords would gladly concur in any plan that could be suggested for retaining the services of the Dutch brigade. The motion was carried by fifty four votes to thirty eight. But a protest was entered, and was signed by all the minority. It is remarkable that Devonshire was, and that Marlborough was not, one of the Dissentients. Marlborough had formerly made himself conspicuous by the keenness and pertinacity with which he had attacked the Dutch. But he had now made his peace with the Court, and was in the receipt of a large salary from the civil list. He was in the House on that day; and therefore, if he voted, must have voted with the majority. The Cavendishes had generally been strenuous supporters of the King and the Junto. But on the subject of the foreign troops Hartington in one House and his father in the other were intractable.

This vote of the Lords caused much murmuring among the Commons. It was said to be most unparliamentary to pass a bill one week, and the next week to pass a resolution condemning that bill. It was true that the bill had been passed before the death of the Electoral Prince was known in London. But that unhappy event, though it might be a good reason for increasing the English army, could be no reason for departing from the principle that the English army should consist of Englishmen. A gentleman who despised the vulgar clamour against professional soldiers, who held the doctrine of Somers's Balancing Letter, and who was prepared to vote for twenty or even thirty thousand men, might yet well ask why any of those men should be foreigners. Were our countrymen naturally inferior to men of other races in any of the qualities which, under proper training, make excellent soldiers? That assuredly was not the opinion of the Prince who had, at the head of Ormond's Life Guards, driven the French household troops, till then invincible, back over the ruins of Neerwinden, and whose eagle eye and applauding voice had followed Cutts's grenadiers up the glacis of Namur. Bitter spirited malecontents muttered that, since there was no honourable service which could not be as well performed by the natives of the realm as by alien mercenaries, it might well be suspected that the King wanted his alien mercenaries for some service not honourable. If it were necessary to repel a French invasion or to put down an Irish insurrection, the Blues and the Buffs would stand by him to the death. But, if his object were to govern in defiance of the votes of his Parliament and of the cry of his people, he might well apprehend that English swords and muskets would, at the crisis, fail him, as they had failed his father in law, and might well wish to surround himself with men who were not of our blood, who had no reverence for our laws, and no sympathy with our feelings. Such imputations could find credit with no body superior in intelligence to those clownish squires who with difficulty managed to spell out Dyer's Letter over their ale. Men of sense and temper admitted that William had never shown any disposition to violate the solemn compact which he had made with the nation, and that, even if he were depraved enough to think of destroying the constitution by military violence, he was not imbecile enough to imagine that the Dutch brigade, or five such brigades, would suffice for his purpose. But such men, while they fully acquitted him of the design attributed to him by factious malignity, could not acquit him of a partiality which it was natural that he should feel, but which it would have been wise in him to hide, and with which it was impossible that his subjects should sympathise. He ought to have known that nothing is more offensive to free and proud nations than the sight of foreign uniforms and standards. Though not much conversant with books, he must have been acquainted with the chief events in the history of his own illustrious House; and he could hardly have been ignorant that his great grandfather had commenced a long and glorious struggle against despotism by exciting the States General of Ghent to demand that all Spanish troops should be withdrawn from the Netherlands. The final parting between the tyrant and the future deliverer was not an event to be forgotten by any of the race of Nassau. "It was the States, Sir," said the Prince of Orange. Philip seized his wrist with a convulsive grasp, and exclaimed, "Not the States, but you, you, you."

William, however, determined to try whether a request made by himself in earnest and almost supplicating terms would induce his subjects to indulge his national partiality at the expense of their own. None of his ministers could flatter him with any hope of success. But on this subject he was too much excited to hear reason. He sent down to the Commons a message, not merely signed by himself according to the usual form, but written throughout with his own hand. He informed them that the necessary preparations had been made for sending away the guards who came with him to England, and that they would immediately embark, unless the House should, out of consideration for him, be disposed to retain them, which he should take very kindly. When the message had been read, a member proposed that a day might be fixed for the consideration of the subject. But the chiefs of the majority would not consent to anything which might seem to indicate hesitation, and moved the previous question. The ministers were in a false position. It was out of their power to answer Harley when he sarcastically declared that he did not suspect them of having advised His Majesty on this occasion. If, he said, those gentlemen had thought it desirable that the Dutch brigade should remain in the kingdom, they would have done so before. There had been many opportunities of raising the question in a perfectly regular manner during the progress of the Disbanding Bill. Of those opportunities nobody had thought fit to avail himself; and it was now too late to reopen the question. Most of the other members who spoke against taking the message into consideration took the same line, declined discussing points which might have been discussed when the Disbanding Bill was before the House, and declared merely that they could not consent to anything so unparliamentary as the repealing of an Act which had just been passed. But this way of dealing with the message was far too mild and moderate to satisfy the implacable malice of Howe. In his courtly days he had vehemently called on the King to use the Dutch for the purpose of quelling the insubordination of the English regiments. "None but the Dutch troops," he said, "are to be trusted." He was now not ashamed to draw a parallel between those very

James, after passing some time at Bourbon, returned to the neighbourhood of Paris with health so far reestablished that he was able to take exercise on horseback, but with judgment and memory evidently impaired. On the thirteenth of September, he had a second fit in his chapel; and it soon became clear that this was a final stroke. He rallied the last energies of his failing body and mind to testify his firm belief in the religion for which he had sacrificed so much. He received the last sacraments with every mark of devotion, exhorted his son to hold fast to the true faith in spite of all temptations, and entreated Middleton, who, almost alone among the courtiers assembled in the bed-chamber, professed himself a Protestant, to take refuge from doubt and error in the bosom of the one infallible Church. After the extreme unction had been administered, James declared that he pardoned all his enemies, and named particularly the Prince of Orange, the Princess of Denmark, and the Emperor. The Emperor's name he repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Take notice, father," he said to the confessor, "that I forgive the Emperor with all my heart." It may perhaps seem strange that he should have found this the hardest of all exercises of Christian charity. But it must be remembered that the Emperor was the only Roman Catholic Prince still living who had been accessory to the Revolution, and that James might not unnaturally consider Roman Catholics who had been accessory to the Revolution as more inexcusably guilty than heretics who might have deluded themselves into the belief that, in violating their duty to him, they were discharging their duty to God.

While James was still able to understand what was said to him, and make intelligible answers, Lewis visited him twice. The English exiles observed that the Most Christian King was to the last considerate and kind in the very slightest matters proceeding. It may, they said, be very proper that Commissioners should be appointed by Act of Parliament to take account of the forfeited property in Ireland. But they should be appointed by a separate Act. Then we should be able to make amendments, to ask for conferences, to give and receive explanations. The Land Tax Bill we cannot amend. We may indeed reject it; but we cannot reject it without shaking public credit, without leaving the kingdom defenceless, without raising a mutiny in the navy. The Lords yielded, but not without a protest which was signed by some strong Whigs and some strong Tories. The King was even more displeased than the Peers. "This Commission," he said, in one of his private letters, "will give plenty of trouble next winter." It did indeed give more trouble than he at all anticipated, and brought the nation nearer than it has ever since been to the verge of another revolution.

And now the supplies had been voted. The spring was brightening and blooming into summer. The lords and squires were sick of London; and the King was sick of England. On the fourth day of May he prorogued the Houses with a speech very different from the speeches with which he had been in the habit of dismissing the preceding Parliament. He uttered not one word of thanks or praise. He expressed a hope that, when they should meet again, they would make effectual provision for the public safety. "I wish," these were his concluding words, "no mischief may happen in the mean time." The gentlemen who thronged the bar withdrew in wrath, and, as they could not take immediate vengeance, laid up his reproaches in their hearts against the beginning of the next session.

The Houses had broken up; but there was still much to be done before the King could set out for Prorogation of Parliament.

James, after passing some time at Bourbon, returned to the neighbourhood of Paris with health so far reestablished that he was able to take exercise on horseback, but with judgment and memory evidently impaired. On the thirteenth of September, he had a second fit in his chapel; and it soon became clear that this was a final stroke. He rallied the last energies of his failing body and mind to testify his firm belief in the religion for which he had sacrificed so much. He received the last sacraments with every mark of devotion, exhorted his son to hold fast to the true faith in spite of all temptations, and entreated Middleton, who, almost alone among the courtiers assembled in the bed-chamber, professed himself a Protestant, to take refuge from doubt and error in the bosom of the one infallible Church. After the extreme unction had been administered, James declared that he pardoned all his enemies, and named particularly the Prince of Orange, the Princess of Denmark, and the Emperor. The Emperor's name he repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Take notice, father," he said to the confessor, "that I forgive the Emperor with all my heart." It may perhaps seem strange that he should have found this the hardest of all exercises of Christian charity. But it must be remembered that the Emperor was the only Roman Catholic Prince still living who had been accessory to the Revolution, and that James might not unnaturally consider Roman Catholics who had been accessory to the Revolution as more inexcusably guilty than heretics who might have deluded themselves into the belief that, in violating their duty to him, they were discharging their duty to God.

While James was still able to understand what was said to him, and make intelligible answers, Lewis visited him twice. The English exiles observed that the Most Christian King was to the last considerate and kind in the very slightest matters

Albemarle. Albemarle, indeed, was all courtesy, good humour, and submission: but Portland would not be conciliated. Even to foreign ministers he railed at his rival and complained of his master. The whole Court was divided between the competitors, but divided very unequally. The majority took the side of Albemarle, whose manners were popular and whose power was evidently growing. Portland's few adherents were persons who, like him, had already made their fortunes, and who did not therefore think it worth their while to transfer their homage to a new patron. One of these persons tried to enlist Prior in Portland's faction, but with very little success. "Excuse me," said the poet, "if I follow your example and my Lord's. My Lord is a model to us all; and you have imitated him to good purpose. He retires with half a million. You have large grants, a lucrative employment in Holland, a fine house. I have nothing of the kind. A court is like those fashionable churches into which we have looked at Paris. Those who have received the benediction are instantly away to the Opera House or the Wood of Boulogne. Those who have not received the benediction are pressing and elbowing each other to get near the altar. You and my Lord have got your blessing, and are quite right to take yourselves off with it. I have not been blest, and must fight my way up as well as I can." Prior's wit was his own. But his worldly wisdom was common to him with multitudes; and the crowd of those who wanted to be lords of the bedchamber, rangers of parks, and lieutenants of counties, neglected Portland and tried to ingratiate themselves with Albemarle.

By one person, however, Portland was still assiduously courted; and that person was the King. Nothing was omitted which could sooth an irritated mind. Sometimes William argued, expostulated and implored during two hours together. But he found the comrade of his youth an altered man, unreasonable, obstinate and disrespectful even before the public eye. The Prussian minister, an observant and impartial witness, declared that his hair had more than once stood on end to see the rude discourtesy with which the servant repelled the gracious advances of the master. Over and over William invited his old friend to take the old accustomed seat in his royal coach, that seat which Prince George himself had never been permitted to invade; and the invitation was over and over declined in a way which would have been thought uncivil even between equals. A sovereign could not, without a culpable sacrifice of his personal dignity, persist longer in such a contest. Portland was permitted to withdraw from the palace. To Heinsius, as to a common friend, William announced this separation in a letter which shows how deeply his feelings had been wounded. "I cannot tell you what I have suffered. I have done on my side everything that I could do to satisfy him; but it was decreed that a blind jealousy should make him regardless of everything that ought to have been dear to him." To Portland himself the King wrote in language still more touching. "I hope that you will oblige me in one thing. Keep your key of office. I shall not consider you as bound to any attendance. But I beg you to let me see you as often as possible. That will be a great mitigation of the distress which you have caused me. For, after all that has passed, I cannot help loving you tenderly."

Thus Portland retired to enjoy at his ease immense estates scattered over half the shires of England, and a hoard of ready money, such, it was said, as no other private man in Europe possessed. His fortune still continued to grow. For, though, after the fashion of his countrymen, he laid out large sums on the interior decoration of his houses, on his gardens, and on his aviaries, his other expenses were regulated with strict frugality. His repose was, however, during some years not uninterrupted. He had been trusted with such grave secrets, and employed in such high missions, that his assistance was still frequently necessary to the government; and that assistance was given, not, as formerly, with the ardour of a devoted friend, but with the exactness of a conscientious servant. He still continued to receive letters from William; letters no longer indeed overflowing with kindness, but always indicative of perfect confidence and esteem.

The chief subject of those letters was the question which had been for a time settled in the ^{Spanish succe-} previous autumn at Loo, and which had ^{sion.} been reopened in the spring by the death of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria.

As soon as that event was known at Paris, Lewis directed Tallard to sound William as to a new treaty.

The first thought which occurred to William was that it might be possible to put the Elector of Bavaria in his son's place. But this suggestion was coldly received at Versailles, and not without reason. If, indeed, the young Francis Joseph had lived to succeed Charles, and had then died a minor without issue, the case would have been very different. Then the Elector would have been actually administering the government of the Spanish monarchy, and, supported by France, England and the United Provinces, might without much difficulty have continued to rule as King the empire which he had begun to rule as Regent. He would have had also, not indeed a right, but something which to the vulgar would have looked like a right, to be his son's heir. Now he was altogether unconnected with Spain. No more reason could be given for selecting him to be the Catholic King than for selecting the Margrave of Baden or the Grand Duke of Tuscany. Something was said

James, after passing some time at Bourbon, returned to the neighbourhood of Paris with health so far reestablished that he was able to take exercise on horseback, but with judgment and memory evidently impaired. On the thirteenth of September, he had a second fit in his chapel; and it soon became clear that this was a final stroke. He rallied the last energies of his failing body and mind to testify his firm belief in the religion for which he had sacrificed so much. He received the last sacraments with every mark of devotion, exhorted his son to hold fast to the true faith in spite of all temptations, and entreated Middleton, who, almost alone among the courtiers assembled in the bed-chamber, professed himself a Protestant, to take refuge from doubt and error in the bosom of the one infallible Church. After the extreme unction had been administered, James declared that he pardoned all his enemies, and named particularly the Prince of Orange, the Princess of Denmark, and the Emperor. The Emperor's name he repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Take notice, father," he said to the confessor, "that I forgive the Emperor with all my heart." It may perhaps seem strange that he should have found this the hardest of all exercises of Christian charity. But it must be remembered that the Emperor was the only Roman Catholic Prince still living who had been accessory to the Revolution, and that James might not unnaturally consider Roman Catholics who had been accessory to the Revolution as more inexcusably guilty than heretics who might have deluded themselves into the belief that, in violating their duty to him, they were discharging their duty to God.

While James was still able to understand what was said to him, and make intelligible answers, Lewis visited him twice. The English exiles observed that the Most Christian King was to the last considerate and kind in the very slightest matters sition, which was indeed a trifle when compared with the maladies under which William was sinking. But in the nature of William there was none of that selfishness which is the too common vice of invalids. On the twentieth of February he sent to Heinsius a letter in which he did not even allude to his own sufferings and infirmities. "I am," he said, "infinitely concerned to learn that your health is not yet quite reestablished. May God be pleased to grant you a speedy recovery. I am unalterably your good friend, William." Those were the last lines of that long correspondence.

On the twentieth of February William was ambling on a favourite horse, named Sorrel, through the park of Hampton Court. He urged his horse to strike into a gallop just at the spot where a mole had been at work. Sorrel stumbled on the mole-hill, and went down on his knees. The King fell off, and broke his collar bone. The bone was set; and he returned to Kensington in his coach. The jolting of the rough roads of that time made it necessary to reduce the fracture again. To a young and vigorous man such an accident would have been a trifle. But the frame of William was not in a condition to bear even the slightest shock. He felt that his time was short, and grieved, with a grief such as only noble spirits feel, to think that he must leave his work but half finished. It was possible that he might still live until one of his plans should be carried into execution. He had long known that the relation in which England and Scotland stood to each other was at best precarious, and often unfriendly, and that it might be doubted whether, in an estimate of the British power, the resources of the smaller country ought not to be deducted from those of the larger. Recent events had proved that, without doubt, the two kingdoms could not possibly continue for another year to be on the terms on which

James, after passing some time at Bourbon, returned to the neighbourhood of Paris with health so far reestablished that he was able to take exercise on horseback, but with judgment and memory evidently impaired. On the thirteenth of September, he had a second fit in his chapel; and it soon became clear that this was a final stroke. He rallied the last energies of his failing body and mind to testify his firm belief in the religion for which he had sacrificed so much. He received the last sacraments with every mark of devotion, exhorted his son to hold fast to the true faith in spite of all temptations, and entreated Middleton, who, almost alone among the courtiers assembled in the bed-chamber, professed himself a Protestant, to take refuge from doubt and error in the bosom of the one infallible Church. After the extreme unction had been administered, James declared that he pardoned all his enemies, and named particularly the Prince of Orange, the Princess of Denmark, and the Emperor. The Emperor's name he repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Take notice, father," he said to the confessor, "that I forgive the Emperor with all my heart." It may perhaps seem strange that he should have found this the hardest of all exercises of Christian charity. But it must be remembered that the Emperor was the only Roman Catholic Prince still living who had been accessory to the Revolution, and that James might not unnaturally consider Roman Catholics who had been accessory to the Revolution as more inexcusably guilty than heretics who might have deluded themselves into the belief that, in violating their duty to him, they were discharging their duty to God.

While James was still able to understand what was said to him, and make intelligible answers, Lewis visited him twice. The English exiles observed that the Most Christian King was to the last considerate and kind in the very slightest matters what he regards as fables, from the altar whence he daily looks down with secret scorn on the prostrate dupes who believe that he can turn a drop of wine into blood, from the confessional where he daily studies with cold and scientific attention the morbid anatomy of guilty consciences, he brings to courts some talents which may move the envy of the more cunning and unscrupulous of lay courtiers; a rare skill in reading characters and in managing tempers, a rare art of dissimulation, a rare dexterity in insinuating what it is not safe to affirm or to propose in explicit terms. There are two feelings which often prevent an unprincipled layman from becoming utterly depraved and despicable, domestic feeling, and chivalrous feeling. His heart may be softened by the endearments of a family. His pride may revolt from the thought of doing what does not become a gentleman. But neither with the domestic feeling nor with the chivalrous feeling has the wicked priest any sympathy. His gown excludes him from the closest and most tender of human relations, and at the same time dispenses him from the observation of the fashionable code of honour.

Such a priest was Portocarrero; and he seems to have been a consummate master of his craft. To the name of statesman he had no pretensions. The lofty part of his predecessor Ximenes was out of the range, not more of his intellectual, than his moral capacity. To reanimate a paralysed and torpid monarchy, to introduce order and economy into a bankrupt treasury, to restore the discipline of an army which had become a mob, to refit a navy which was perishing from mere rottenness, these were achievements beyond the power, beyond even the ambition, of that ignoble nature. But there was one task for which the new minister was admirably qualified, that of establishing, by means of superstitious terror, an absolute dominion over a feeble should take James the Second of England to himself, France should recognise the Pretender as King James the Third?

The ministers were, one and all, against the recognition. Indeed, it seems difficult to understand how any person who had any pretensions to the name of statesman should have been of a different opinion. Torcy took his stand on the ground that to recognise the Prince of Wales would be to violate the Treaty of Ryswick. This was indeed an impregnable position. By that treaty His Most Christian Majesty had bound himself to do nothing which could, directly or indirectly, disturb the existing order of things in England. And in what way, except by an actual invasion, could he do more to disturb the existing order of things in England than by solemnly declaring in the face of the whole world, that he did not consider that order of things as legitimate, that he regarded the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement as nullities, and the King in possession as an usurper? The recognition would then be a breach of faith: and, even if all considerations of morality were set aside, it was plain that it would, at that moment be wise in the French government to avoid everything which could with plausibility be represented as a breach of faith. The crisis was a very peculiar one. The great diplomatic victory won by France in the preceding year had excited the fear and hatred of her neighbours. Nevertheless there was, as yet, no great coalition against her. The House of Austria, indeed, had appealed to arms. But with the House of Austria alone the House of Bourbon could easily deal. Other powers were still looking in doubt to England for the signal; and England, though her aspect was sullen and menacing, still preserved neutrality. That neutrality would not have lasted so long, if William could have relied on the support of his Parliament and of his people. In his Parliament there were agents of France, who, though few, had was unjustifiable, there could be no doubt that Lewis was far more to blame than William. For it was by Lewis, and not by William, that the partition had been originally suggested; and it was Lewis, and not William, who was to gain an accession of territory by the partition. Nobody could doubt that William would most gladly have acceded to any arrangement by which the Spanish monarchy could be preserved entire without danger to the liberties of Europe, and that he had agreed to the division of that monarchy solely for the purpose of contenting Lewis. Nevertheless the Spanish ministers carefully avoided whatever could give offence to Lewis, and indemnified themselves by offering a gross indignity to William. The truth is that their pride had, as extravagant pride often has, a close affinity with meanness. They knew that it was unsafe to insult Lewis; and they believed that they might with perfect safety insult William. Lewis was absolute master of his large kingdom. He had at no great distance armies and fleets which one word from him would put in motion. If he were provoked, the white flag might in a few days be again flying on the walls of Barcelona. His immense power was contemplated by the Castilians with hope as well as with fear. He and he alone, they imagined, could avert that dismemberment of which they could not bear to think. Perhaps he might yet be induced to violate the engagements into which he had entered with England and Holland, if one of his grandsons were named successor to the Spanish throne. He, therefore, must be respected and courted. But William could at that moment do little to hurt or to help. He could hardly be said to have an army. He could take no step which would require an outlay of money without the sanction of the House of Commons; and it seemed to be the chief study of the House of Commons to cross him and to humble obtained so much influence by clamouring against standing armies, profuse grants, and Dutch favourites, that they were often blindly followed by the majority; and his people, distracted by domestic factions, unaccustomed to busy themselves about continental politics, and remembering with bitterness the disasters and burdens of the last war, the carnage of Landen, the loss of the Smyrna fleet, the land tax at four shillings in the pound, hesitated about engaging in another contest, and would probably continue to hesitate while he continued to live. He could not live long. It had, indeed, often been prophesied that his death was at hand; and the prophets had hitherto been mistaken. But there was now no possibility of mistake. His cough was more violent than ever; his legs were swollen; his eyes, once bright and clear as those of a falcon, had grown dim; he who, on the day of the Boyne, had been sixteen hours on the backs of different horses, could now with great difficulty creep into his state coach.* The vigorous intellect, and the intrepid spirit, remained; but on the body fifty years had done the work of ninety. In a few months the vaults of Westminster would receive the emaciated and shattered frame which was animated by the most far-sighted, the most daring, the most commanding of souls. In a few months the British throne would be filled by a woman whose understanding was well known to be feeble, and who was believed to lean towards the party which was averse from war. To get over those few months without an open and violent rupture should have been the first object of the French government. Every engagement should have been punctually fulfilled: every occasion of quarrel should have been

* Poussin to Torcy, April 28.
May 8.
1701. "Le roi d'Angleterre
tousse plus qu'il n'a jamais fait, et ses jambes sont fort enflées.
Je le vis hier sortir du préche de

Saint James. Je le trouve fort cassé, les yeux éteints, et il eut beaucoup de peine à monter en
carosse."

icious; and that the benefit which the public had derived from one happy project formed by him would be very dearly purchased if it were taken for granted that all his other projects must be equally happy. Disgusted by what he considered as the ingratitude of the English, he repaired to the Continent, in the hope that he might be able to interest the traders of the Hanse Towns and the princes of the German Empire in his plans. From the Continent he returned unsuccessful to London; and then at length the thought that he might be more justly appreciated by his countrymen than by strangers seems to have risen in his mind. Just at this time he fell in with Fletcher of Saltoun, who happened to be in England. These eccentric men soon became intimate. Each of them had his monomania; and the two monomanias suited each other perfectly. Fletcher's whole soul was possessed by a sore, jealous, punctilious patriotism. His heart was ulcerated by the thought of the poverty, the feebleness, the political insignificance of Scotland, and of the indignities which she had suffered at the hand of her powerful and opulent neighbour. When he talked of her wrongs his dark meagre face took its sternest expression: his habitual frown grew blacker; and his eyes flashed more than their wonted fire. Paterson, on the other hand, firmly believed himself to have discovered the means of making any state which would follow his counsel great and prosperous in a time which, when compared with the life of an individual, could hardly be called long, and which, in the life of a nation, was but as a moment. There is not the least reason to believe that he was dishonest. Indeed he would have found more difficulty in deceiving others had he not begun by deceiving himself. His faith in his own schemes was strong even to martyrdom; and the eloquence with which he illustrated and defended them had all the charm of sincerity and of enthu-

began to feel serious uneasiness. His ministers were directed to declare everywhere that their master had no intention of affronting the English government, that he had not violated the Treaty of Ryswick, that he had no intention of violating it, that he had merely meant to gratify an unfortunate family nearly related to himself by using names and observing forms which really meant nothing, and that he was resolved not to countenance any attempt to subvert the throne of William. Torcy, who had, a few days before, proved by irrefragable arguments that his master could not, without a gross breach of contract, recognise the Pretender, imagined that sophisms which had not imposed on himself might possibly impose on others. He visited the English embassy, obtained admittance, and, as was his duty, did his best to excuse the fatal act which he had done his best to prevent. Manchester's answer to this attempt at explanation was as strong and plain as it could be in the absence of precise instructions. The instructions speedily arrived. The courier who carried the news of the recognition to Loo arrived there when William was at table with some of his nobles and some princes of the German Empire who had visited him in his retreat. The King said not a word : but his pale cheek flushed : and he pulled his hat over his eyes to conceal the changes of his countenance. He hastened to send off several messengers. One carried a letter commanding Manchester to quit France without taking leave. Another started for London with a despatch which directed the Lords Justices to send Poussin instantly out of England.

England was already in a flame when it was first known there that James was dying. Some of his eager partisans formed plans and made preparations for a great public manifestation of feeling in different parts of the island. But the insolence of Lewis produced a burst of public indignation which scarcely any malecontent had the courage to face.

In the city of London, indeed, some zealots, who had probably swallowed too many bumpers to their new Sovereign, played one of those senseless pranks which were characteristic of their party. They dressed themselves in coats bearing some resemblance to the tabards of heralds, rode through the streets, halted at some places, and muttered something which nobody could understand. It was at first supposed that they were merely a company of prize fighters from Hockley in the Hole who had taken this way of advertising their performances with back sword, sword and buckler, and single falchion. But it was soon discovered that these gaudily dressed horsemen were proclaiming James the Third. In an instant the pageant was at an end. The mock kings at arms and pursuivants threw away their finery and fled for their lives in all directions, followed by yells and showers of stones.* Already the Common Council of London had met, and had voted, without one dissentient voice, an address expressing the highest resentment at the insult which France had offered to the King and the kingdom. A few hours after this address had been presented to the Regents, the Livery assembled to choose a Lord Mayor. Duncombe, the Tory candidate, lately the popular favourite, was rejected, and a Whig alderman placed in the chair. All over the kingdom, corporations, grand juries, meetings of magistrates, meetings of freeholders, were passing resolutions breathing affection to William, and defiance to Lewis. It was necessary to enlarge the "London Gazette" from four columns to twelve; and even twelve were too few to hold the multitude of loyal and patriotic addresses. In some of those addresses severe reflections were thrown on the House of Commons. Our deliverer had been ungratefully requited, thwarted, mortified, denied the means of making the country respected and feared by neighbouring states. The factious wrangling, the penny wise economy, of three disgraceful years had produced the effect which might have been expected. His Majesty would never have been so grossly affronted abroad, if he had not first been affronted at home. But the eyes of his people were opened. He had only to appeal from the representatives to the constituents; and he would find that the nation was still sound at heart.

* Lettres Historiques Mois de Novembre 1701

Poussin had been directed to offer to the Lords Justices explanations similar to those with which Torcy had attempted to appease Manchester. A memorial was accordingly drawn up and presented to Vernon: but Vernon refused to look at it. Soon a courier arrived from Loo with the letter in which William directed his viceregents to send the French agent out of the kingdom. An officer of the royal household was charged with the execution of the order. He repaired to Poussin's lodgings: but Poussin was not at home: he was supping at the Blue Posts, a tavern much frequented by Jacobites, the very tavern indeed at which Charnock and his gang had breakfasted on the day fixed for the murderous ambuscade of Turnham Green. To this house the messenger went; and there he found Poussin at table with three of the most virulent Tory members of the House of Commons, Tredenham, who returned himself for Saint Mawes; Hammond, who had been sent to Parliament by the high churchmen of the University of Cambridge; and Davenant, who had recently, at Poussin's suggestion, been rewarded by Lewis for some savage invectives against the Whigs with a diamond ring worth three thousand pistoles. This supper party was, during some weeks, the chief topic of conversation. The exultation of the Whigs was the citizen of Edinburgh or Glasgow? The truth was that, in all those qualities which conduce to success in life, and especially in commercial life, the Scot had never been surpassed; perhaps he had never been equalled. All that was necessary was that his energy should take a proper direction: and a proper direction Paterson undertook to give.

His esoteric project was the original project of Christopher Columbus, extended and modified. Columbus had hoped to establish a communication between our quarter of the world and India across the great western ocean. But he was stopped by an unexpected obstacle. The American continent, stretching far north and far south into cold and inhospitable regions, presented what seemed an insurmountable barrier to his progress; and, in the same year in which he first set foot on that continent, Gama reached Malabar by doubling the Cape of Good Hope. The consequence was that during two hundred years the trade of Europe with the remoter parts of Asia had been carried on by rounding the immense peninsula of Africa. Paterson now revived the project of Columbus, and persuaded himself and others that it was possible to carry that project into effect in such a manner as to make his country the greatest emporium that had ever existed on our globe.

For this purpose it was necessary to occupy in America some spot which might be a resting place between Scotland and India. It was true that almost every habitable part of America had already been seized by some European power. Paterson, however, imagined that one province, the most important of all, had been overlooked by the short-sighted cupidity of vulgar politicians and vulgar traders. The isthmus which joined the two great continents of the New World remained, according to him, unappropriated. Great Spanish vice-royalties, he said, lay on the east and on the west; but the mountains and forests of accordingly slept at Greenwich, and thence proceeded to Hampton Court without entering London. His return was, however, celebrated by the populace with every sign of joy and attachment. The bonfires blazed, and the gunpowder roared, all night. In every parish from Mile End to Saint James's, was to be seen enthroned on the shoulders of stout Protestant porters a pope, gorgeous in robes of tinsel and triple crown of pasteboard; and close to the ear of His Holiness stood a devil with horns, cloven hoof, and a snake tail.

Even in his country house the King could find no refuge from the importunate loyalty of his people. Deputations from cities, counties, universities, besieged him all day. He was, he wrote to Heinsius, quite exhausted by the labour of hearing harangues and returning answers. The whole kingdom meanwhile was looking anxiously towards Hampton Court. Most of the ministers were assembled there. The most eminent men of the party which was out of power had repaired thither, to pay their duty to their sovereign, and to congratulate him on his safe return. It was remarked that Somers and Halifax, so malignantly persecuted a few months ago by the House of Commons, were received with such marks of esteem and kindness as William was little in the habit of vouchsafing to his English courtiers. The lower ranks of both the great factions were violently agitated. The Whigs, lately vanquished and dispirited, were full of hope and ardour. The Tories, lately triumphant and secure, were exasperated and alarmed. Both Whigs and Tories waited with intense anxiety for the decision of one momentous and pressing question. Would there be a dissolution? On the seventh of November the King propounded that question to his Privy Council. It was rumoured, and is highly probable, that Jersey, Wright and Hedges advised him to keep the existing Parliament.

easy gliding before the trade winds over blue and sparkling waters. The voyage back across the Pacific would, in the latitude of Japan, be almost equally speedy and pleasant. Time, labour, money, would be saved. The returns would come in more quickly. Fewer hands would be required to navigate the ships. The loss of a vessel would be a rare event. The trade would increase fast. In a short time it would double; and it would all pass through Darien. Whoever possessed that door of the sea, that key of the universe,—such were the bold figures which Paterson loved to employ,—would give law to both hemispheres; and would, by peaceful arts, without shedding one drop of blood, establish an empire as splendid as that of Cyrus or Alexander. Of the kingdoms of Europe, Scotland was, as yet, the poorest and the least considered. If she would but occupy Darien, if she would but become one great free port, one great warehouse for the wealth which the soil of Darien might produce, and for the still greater wealth which would be poured into Darien from Canton and Siam, from Ceylon and the Moluccas, from the mouths of the Ganges and the Gulf of Cambay, she would at once take her place in the first rank among nations. No rival would be able to contend with her either in the West Indian or in the East Indian trade. The beggarly country, as it had been insolently called by the inhabitants of warmer and more fruitful regions, would be the great mart for the choicest luxuries, sugar, rum, coffee, chocolate, tobacco, the tea and porcelain of China, the muslin of Dacca, the shawls of Cashmere, the diamonds of Golconda, the pearls of Karrack, the delicious birds' nests of Nicobar, cinnamon and pepper, ivory and sandal wood. From Scotland would come all the finest jewels and brocade worn by duchesses at the balls of St. James's and Versailles. From Scotland would come all the decorum, the great Commander who had saved the state at La Hogue, the great Financier who had restored the currency and reestablished public credit, the great Judge whom all persons not blinded by prejudice acknowledged to be, in virtue, in prudence, in learning and eloquence, the first of living English jurists and statesmen. The Tories answered that they had been only too moderate, only too merciful; that they had used the Speaker's warrant and the power of tacking only too sparingly; and that, if they ever again had a majority, the three Whig leaders who now imagined themselves secure should be impeached, not for high misdemeanours, but for high treason. It soon appeared that these threats were not likely to be very speedily executed. Four Whig and four Tory candidates contested the City of London. The show of hands was for the Whigs. A poll was demanded; and the Whigs polled nearly two votes to one. Sir John Levison Gower, who was supposed to have ingratiated himself with the whole body of shopkeepers by some parts of his parliamentary conduct, was put up for Westminster on the Tory interest; and the electors were reminded by puffs in the newspapers of the services which he had rendered to trade. But the dread of the French King, the Pope, and the Pretender, prevailed; and Sir John was at the bottom of the poll. Southwark not only returned Whigs, but gave them instructions of the most Whiggish character.

In the country, parties were more nearly balanced than in the capital. Yet the news from every quarter was that the Whigs had recovered part at least of the ground which they had lost. Wharton had regained his ascendancy in Buckinghamshire. Musgrave was rejected by Westmoreland. Nothing did more harm to the Tory candidates than the story of Poussin's farewell supper. We learn from their own acrimonious invectives that the unlucky discovery of great maritime power which would not far have seen the isthmus between the Atlantic and Pacific in the hands of Spain, than in the hands of the Darien Company. Lewis could not but have tended to aggrandise a state governed by him. To Holland the East India trade was the apple of her eye. She had been the chief benefactor by the discoveries of Gama; and it might be said that she would do all that could be done by her, if need were, by violence, rather than suffer any other power to be to her what she had been to Venice. Lewis remained; and Paterson was sanguine enough to flatter himself that England might be induced to lend her powerful aid to the Company. He accordingly repaired to London, opened an office in Clement's Lane, formed a Board of Directors corresponding to the Central Board at Edinburgh, and called in the capitalists of the Royal Exchange to subscribe for the stock which had not been reserved for the Scotchmen resident in Scotland. A few monied men were allured by the bait: but the clamour of the people was loud and menacing; and from the City a flood of indignation spread fast through the country. In this feeling there was undoubtedly a large element of evil. National antipathy operated on the popular minds, religious antipathy on others. But it is impossible to deny that the anger which Paterson's schemes excited throughout the south of the island was in the main, just and reasonable. Though it was not yet generally known in what precise spot his colony was to be planted, there could be little doubt that he intended to occupy some part of America; and there could be as little doubt that such occupation would be resisted. There would be a maritime war; and such a war Scotland had no means of carrying on. The state of her finances was such that she must be quite unable to fit out even a single squadron of moderate size. Before the conflict had lasted three months, she would have neither money nor credit left. These things were obvious to every coffeehouse politician; and it was impossible to believe that they had escaped the notice of men so able and well informed as some who sate in the Privy Council and Parliament at Edinburgh. In one way only could the conduct of these schemers be explained. They meant to make a dupe and a tool of the Southron. The two British kingdoms were so closely connected, physically and politically, that it was scarcely possible for one of them to be at peace with a power with which the other was at war. If the Scotch drew King William into a quarrel, England must, from regard to her own dignity which was bound up with his, support him in it. She was to be tricked into a bloody and expensive contest in the event of which she had no interest; nay, into a contest in which victory would be a greater calamity to her than defeat. She was to lavish her wealth and the lives of her seamen, in order that a set of cunning foreigners might enjoy a monopoly by which she would be the chief sufferer. She was to conquer and defend provinces for the Scotch corporation; and her reward was to be that her merchants were to be undersold, her customers decoyed away, her exchequer beggared. There would be an end to the disputes between the Old East India Company and the New East India Company; for both Companies would be ruined alike. The two great springs of revenue would be dried up together. What would be the receipt of the Customs, what of the Excise, when vast magazines of sugar, rum, tobacco, coffee, chocolate, tea, spices, silks, muslins, all duty free, should be formed along the estuaries of the Forth and of the Clyde, and along the border from the mouth of the Esk to the mouth of the Tweed? What army, what fleet, would be sufficient to protect the interests of the government and of the fair trader while the kingdom of Scotland should be turned into one great smuggling establishment? Paterson's plan was simply this, that England should first spend millions in defence of the trade of his Company, and should then be plundered of twice as many millions by means of that very trade.

The cry of the city and of the nation was soon echoed by the legislature. When the Parliament met for the first time after the general election of 1695, Rochester called the attention of the Lords to the constitution and designs of the Company. Several witnesses were summoned to the bar, and gave evidence which produced a powerful effect on the House. "If these Scots are to have their way," said one peer, "I shall go and settle in Scotland, and not stay here to be made a beggar." The Lords resolved to represent strongly to the King the injustice of requiring England to exert her power in support of an enterprise which, if successful, must be fatal to her commerce and to her finances. A representation was drawn up and communicated to the Commons. The Commons eagerly concurred, and complimented the Peers on the promptitude with which their Lordships had, on this occasion, stood forth to protect the public interests. The two Houses went up together to Kensington with the address. William had been under the walls of Namur when the Act for incorporating the Company had been touched with his sceptre at Edinburgh, and had known nothing about that Act till his attention had been called to it by the clamour of his English subjects. He now said, in plain terms, that he had been ill served in Scotland, but that he would try to find a remedy for the evil which had been brought to his notice. The Lord High Commissioner Tweeddale and Secretary Johnstone were immediately dismissed. But the Act which had been passed by their management still continued to be law in Scotland; nor was it in their master's power to undo what they had done.

CONVOCAATION

- Convocation of 1689; its temper, v. 103, 104. Exasperated by the proceedings in Scotland, 108, 109. Meets, 116. The Houses differ on the Address, 119. Waste of time by the Lower House, 120. Jealousies in, 121, note. Prorogued, 121
- Conyngham, Sir Albert, leader of Enniskillen Dragoons, v. 258
- Cook, Sir Thomas, Chairman of the East India Company, vii. 50. His accounts of his expenditure, 179. Sent to the Tower, 181. Obtains a Bill of Indemnity, 182
- Cook, a nonjuring clergyman, assists in the absolution of Friend and Parkyns at Tyburn, vii. 311
- Cooper, Bishop, his answer to Martin Marprelate, i. 76, note
- Cork, James II. at, iv. 178. Taken by Marlborough, v. 314
- Cornbury, Edward, Viscount, deserts to William, iii. 240. His signature forged by Robert Young, vi. 255
- Cornish, Henry; his trial and execution, ii. 245, 247. His attainder reversed, v. 42
- Cornwall, tin and copper in, i. 328. Feeling in, on the imprisonment of Bishop Trelawney, iii. 106. Levies in, in expectation of a French landing, v. 286
- Cornwallis, Charles, Lord, made First Lord of the Admiralty, vi. 190
- Coronation oath, iv. 119, 120
- Corporation Act, Bill for the repeal of, iv. 113
- Corporation Bill. The, v. 45
- Cosino, Grand Duke; his travels, i. 340, note, 365, note. His praise of English inns, 399, note
- Cotton manufacture, i. 354
- Country gentlemen, i. 331. Their rudeness of manners, 332. Their loyalty and attachment to the Church, 334—336
- "Country party," the, i. 211. Opposes the Cabal; 228. Difficulties of, 236. Its dealings with France, 237. The new Country party, ii. 217
- Covenanters, Scotch, i. 193. Persecution

CREWE

- of, ii. 73. Summary executions of, 74—77. Their hatred of the observance of festivals, iv. 259. Dissatisfied with the Convention, 305. Their scruples about taking arms for William III., 358, 360
- Covent Garden, i. 372
- Coventry, riots at, ii. 355
- Coventry, Sir John, Charles II.'s revenge on, i. 212
- Cowley, Abraham, i. 412. His Ode to the Royal Society, 423
- Cowper, William, supports the attainder of Fenwick, vii. 377. Opposes the Bill for regulating Elections, 405. His popular qualities; member for Hertford, viii. 229. His defence of Lord Somers, 277
- Cowper, Spencer, brother of the preceding, attachment of a young Quaker lady to, viii. 230. Accused of murdering her, 231. His acquittal; grandfather of William Cowper, the poet, 233
- Cowper, William, a celebrated anatomist, viii. 232
- Craggs, James; his early career; becomes an army clothier; sent to the Tower for refusing to produce his books, vii. 175
- Cranburne, Charles, purveyor of arms to Jacobite conspirators, vii. 285. Executed, 313
- Crane, bearer of James II.'s letter to the Scotch Convention, iv. 288
- Cranmer, Archbishop; his character, i. 53. His opinions of royal supremacy, 57
- Craven, William, Earl of, iii. 324
- Crawford, Earl of, President of the Scotch Parliament, iv. 307. Presides at the torture of Neville Payne, v. 335
- Crecy, French negotiator at Ryswick, vii. 423
- Cresset, John; his pamphlet against stage coaches, i. 395, note
- Crewe, Nathaniel, Bishop of Durham; Ecclesiastical Commissioner, ii. 350. Takes part in a Popish procession, iii. 3. Present at the interview of the the Antipodes now is ; and the adventurers suffered much. The rations were scanty : there were bitter complaints both of the bread and of the meat ; and, when the little fleet, after passing round the Orkneys and Ireland, touched at Madeira, those gentlemen who had fine clothes among their baggage were glad to exchange embroidered coats and laced waistcoats for provisions and wine. From Madeira the adventurers ran across the Atlantic, landed on an uninhabited islet lying between Porto Rico and St. Thomas, took possession of this desolate spot in the name of the Company, set up a tent, and hoisted the white cross of St. Andrew. Soon, however, they were warned off by an officer who was sent from St. Thomas to inform them that they were trespassing on the territory of the King of Denmark. They proceeded on their voyage, having obtained the services of an old buccaneer who knew the coast of Central America well. Under his pilotage they anchored on the first of November close to the Isthmus of Darien. One of the greatest princes of the country soon came on board. The courtiers who attended him, ten or twelve in number, were stark naked : but he was distinguished by a red coat, a pair of cotton drawers, and an old hat. He had a Spanish name, spoke Spanish, and affected the grave deportment of a Spanish don. The Scotch propitiated Andreas, as he was called, by a present of a new hat blazing with gold lace, and assured him that, if he would trade with them, they would treat him better than the Castilians had done.

A few hours later the chiefs of the expedition went on shore, took formal possession of the country, and named it Caledonia. They were pleased with the aspect of a small peninsula about three miles in length and a quarter of a mile in breadth, and determined to fix here the city of New Edinburgh, destined, as they hoped, to be the great emporium of

DANBY

- Danby, Earl of, son of the above. See Caernarthen
- Danes, their struggle with the Saxons, i. 10. Danish troops in William's army at the Boyne, v. 257
- Dangerfield, a witness in the Popish plot, i. 268. His trial, ii. 63. His death from flogging, 64. His narrative published by Williams, iii. 77. See Williams
- Danvers, an English refugee in Holland, ii. 102. A follower of Monmouth, 121. His cowardly conduct, 169
- Darcy, Colonel John, ii. 279
- Dare, Thomas, a follower of Monmouth, ii. 154. His quarrel with Fletcher, of Saltoun; is slain, 155
- Darien, Scottish colonisation of, proposed by William Paterson, viii. 201—204. The Company, 204. Number of small shareholders, 207. The violation of the rights of Spain overlooked, 208, 209. Impolicy of the scheme, 210. Certain hostility of other powers, 211. Unfavourable opinions in England, 212, 213. The scheme persisted in, 214. Departure of the expedition, 215. Arrival at the Isthmus, 216. Establishment of the colony; dealings with the native chieftains, 217. Internal government, 218. Hostility of the neighbouring settlements, 219. Rumours of disaster reach London, 222. Strange inattention to considerations of climate, 223. Mortality among the settlers, 224. Disastrous flight; a remnant arrives at New York, 225. Arrival of the second expedition at Darien, 225. Internal quarrels, 226. Besieged by a Spanish force; capitulate, 227
- Dartmouth, George Legge, Lord; receives Monmouth into his custody, ii. 199; iii. 202. The commander of James II.'s fleet, 202. Detained in the Thames by the wind, 218. Driven into Portsmouth by weather, 225. Refuses to send the Prince of Wales to France, 269. Removed from the command of the fleet, 339. Takes

DEVONSHIRE

- the oath of allegiance to William III, iv. 33. Takes part in Jacobite plots, v. 218, 357. Furnishes Preston with information for St. Germain's, 360. Informed against by Preston, vi. 21. His denial of his guilt, 23. Dies in the Tower, 23
- Davenant, Charles, his calculations of agricultural produce, i. 326. Of mineral produce, 328, note. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337
- Davenant, a French partisan; found at supper with the French ambassador; pretends that the meeting was accidental, viii. 291. Loses his seat in Parliament, 296
- Declaration of Indulgence. See Indulgence
- Declaration of Right, iii. 400
- Defoe, Daniel; his "True-born Englishman," iv. 61, note
- Delamere, Henry Booth, Lord. See Warrington, Earl of
- De la Rue; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Informs against his confederates, 294. His evidence, 303
- Delaval, Sir Ralph, destroys French ships at Cherburg, vi. 246. Placed over the navy, 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Delegates, Court of, ii. 345
- Delft, residence of the French envoys during the negotiations at Ryswick, vii. 423
- Denmark; its jealousy of England and Holland, vi. 265, 266
- Derby, i. 352
- Derby, James, Earl of, iii. 60
- Derby, William, Earl of (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Derbyshire, roads in, i. 389
- De Ruyter, i. 227
- De Vere, Captain; his reply to Queen Elizabeth at Tilbury, viii. 15
- Devonshire, wages in, i. 431. Muster of, in expectation of a French landing after the battle of Beachy Head, v. 285
- Devonshire, William Cavendish, Earl of,

DEVONSHIRE

- ii. 284, 509. His quarrel with Colepepper, 510. Fined exorbitantly; imprisoned, 511, 512. Released, 513. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 142. Signs the invitation to William of Orange, 147. Heads the rising in Derbyshire, 251. Meeting of Peers at his house, 322, 325. Appointed Lord Steward, iv. 24. Made a Knight of the Garter, 125. Inquiry into his case, v. 6. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1. Involved in Preston's confession, 21. William's magnanimity to him, 22. Raised to the dukedom, vii. 132. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, 190. Transmits Fenwick's confession to William, 352. His part in the debate on Fenwick's attainder, 393—395. At the death-bed of William III., viii. 302
- Devonshire, Countess Dowager of, ii. 512
- De Witt, John, Grand Pensionary of Holland, i. 210. Murdered, 227
- Dieppe, Bombardment of, vii. 139
- Digby, Edward; his letters from the Tower, ii. 260
- Dispensing power, i. 32. Questions as to the extent of, 230. James II.'s claim to, ii. 335. Recognised by the Court of King's Bench, 339. James's exercise of, 340
- Dissent, secret (time of Charles I.), i. 92
- "Dissenter, Letter to a," ii. 417
- Dockwray, William; his penny post, i. 412
- Dodwell, Henry; his Jacobitism, included in the Act of Attainder, iv. 226. A nonjuror, v. 87. His strange theories, 88
- Dolben, Gilbert, iii. 365
- Domains, Royal, i. 30; viii. 31
- Donelagh, Captain, a Jacobite agent, vii. 345
- Donore, James II.'s head-quarters at, v. 255
- Dorchester, Jeffreys at, ii. 223
- Dorchester, Countess of (Catharine Sedley), ii. 323. Her power over James

DRYDEN

- II., 323, 325. Retires to Ireland, 327. Returns to London, 406. Her letter to James, v. 361
- Dorset, Charles Sackville, Earl of, iii. 56, 58. Dismissed from the Lord-Lieutenancy of Sussex, 59. Assists the flight of the Princess Anne, 260. Appointed Lord Chamberlain, iv. 24. His conduct towards Dryden. One of the Council of Nine, v. 229. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. Involved in Preston's Confession, 21. William's magnanimity to him, 22. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, vii. 190. His part in the debate on Fenwick's Attainder, 393—396. Resigns the office of Chamberlain, 413
- Dort, Synod of, i. 79, 82
- Douglas, Andrew; his part in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
- Douglas, James, commands the Scotch foot-guards at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257, 262. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Dover, treaty of, i. 218
- Dover, Henry Jernyn, Lord, ii. 301. Made Privy Councillor, 370. His advice to James II., 402. At the Board of Treasury, 416. Lord-Lieutenant of Cambridgeshire, iii. 63. Sent to Portsmouth to aid the Prince of Wales's escape, 268. Attends James to Ireland, iv. 173. Makes his submission to William III., v. 350
- Drama, the, under Charles II., i. 417
- Drogheda, v. 254. Surrenders to William III., 271
- Dromore, skirmish at, iv. 169
- Drumlanrig, Earl of, deserts James II., iii. 258
- Drummond, Captain; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 217. Denounced by the Scotch Parliament, vii. 204
- Drummond, General, a Scotch Privy Councillor, ii. 373. Resists the measures of James II., ii. 377
- Dryden, John; his sneers at the militia, i. 303, note. His testimony to Archbishop Tillotson, 345, note. At Will's Coffee House, 384. His Fa-

DUART

- bles; price of the copyright, 418. His Absalom and Achitophel, 420. His Annus Mirabilis, 423. Converted to Popery, ii. 197, 456. His Hind and Panther, 458. Literary attacks on, 459. Regrets James II.'s violent measures, iii. 50, note. Dismissed from the laureateship, iv. 24. His dedication to Halifax, v. 289. His Aurungzebe, vi. 135. His translation of Virgil; price of the copyright, vii. 152. His complaints of bad money sent by Tonson, 257
- Duart, Maclean of, iv. 345
- Dublin, James II.'s entry into, iv. 180. Its appearance in 1689, 181. Factions in the Court at, 183, 186. Irish Parliament at, 209. James II.'s Court at, v. 211. Excitement in, on the news of William III.'s landing, 249. Return of James's army after the battle of the Boyne, 272. Evacuated by the Jacobite troops, 274. William's entry into, 276
- Dudley, Guilford, ii. 207
- Dugdale, a witness against Lord Stafford, i. 270. Against College, 275. His death, ii. 56
- Du Guay Trouin, a French privateer, vi. 302
- Dumbarton's regiment, ii. 183, 608
- Dumblane, Peregrine Osborne, Lord. See Caermarthen
- Dumont, an accomplice in the plot for assassinating William, vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
- Duncombe, Charles, a banker, purchases Helmsley, vii. 258. A partisan of Sunderland, viii. 19. Attacks Montague in Parliament, 36. Convicted of fraud and forgery, 37. Bill of Pains and Penalties against him passed by the Commons, 40. The mode of procedure an objectionable one, 43, 44. His judges interested in his condemnation, 45. Objections raised in the House of Peers, 46, 47. The Bill thrown out, and the prisoner released, 48. Again arrested, 49
- Duncombe, William, his long annuity, vi. 336, note

D'USSON

- Dundalk, Marshal Schomberg's camp at, v. 49—53
- Dumdee, John Graham Viscount of (Claverhouse), ii. 73. His cruelties, 74. His presence in England during the Revolution, iv. 278, 279. His interview with James II.; returns to Scotland under William III.'s protection, 281. At Edinburgh, 282. Threatened by the Covenanters, 286. His flight, 291. His interview with the Duke of Gordon, 292. His threatened arrest; joins Macdonald of Keppock, 341, 342. His design for a coalition of clans, 343. Muster of his supporters, 344. Quarrels in his army, 354. Applies to James for assistance, 356. Hatred of, in the West of Scotland, 358. Marches into Athol, 370. Arrives at Blair; holds a council of war, 372. Gives battle at Killiecrankie, 373. His death, 377. Buried at Blair Athol, 382
- Dunfermline, James Seton, Earl of, iv. 353. Conduct of James II. to, at St. Germaine, vii. 5
- Dunkeld, battle of, iv. 391
- Dunkeld, James Galloway, Earl of, iv. 353
- Dunkirk, sale of, by Charles II., i. 197. Privateers of, vi. 301. Naval attack upon, in 1694, vii. 139
- Dunlop, a Scotch Presbyterian minister, v. 333
- Dunning, Richard; his tract on the condition of the poor in Devonshire, i. 438, note
- Dunton, his Athenian Mercury, vii. 231
- Durant; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 287
- Duras, Duke of, takes Philipsburg, iii. 192. French Commander in the Palatinate, iv. 126, 127
- Durfee, Thomas; his Political Odes, ii. 55
- D'Usson, commands the defence of Athlone, vi. 86. Trampled upon in the retreat, 90. Besieged in Galway, 91. Capitulates; returns to Limerick, 98, 99. Dutch, the, jealousy of, in the English army, iv. 162. Animo-

DUVAL

- sity to, in 1698, viii. 123. Departure of William III.'s Dutch guards, 175, 176
- Duval, Claude, the celebrated highwayman, i. 398
- Dyer; his newsletters, vii. 147
- Dykvelt, Everard Van, Dutch envoy; his conversation with James II., ii. 129. His second mission to England, 505. His communications with English statesmen, 506—515. Returns to the Hague, 520. Sent by the States General to congratulate William on his success, iii. 848. Arrests Bouffiers, vii. 226. His negotiations with Calieres, 342, 343, 863

- EACHARD, John, on the condition of the clergy, i. 340, note, 343, note
- East India Company, incorporation of, vi. 133. Its growing trade, 136. Its great profits, 137. Assailed by interloping traders, 139. Political changes in, 141. Quarrels with the Mogul Government, 143. Its position after the Revolution, 144. Proposed reforms in; formation of the New Company, 148. Contest between the Old and New Companies, 149. Obtains a new charter, vii. 50. Persecutes independent traders; affair of the Redbridge, 98, 99. Parliamentary examination of its accounts, 179. Its losses by privateers, 230. Its position in 1698, viii. 59. Petitions against Montague's Indian policy, 62
- East India House (in the 17th century), vi. 136
- East Indies, trade with; question regarding, vi. 131
- Ecclesiastical Commission, appointed by William III., v. 96. Its first proceedings, 97. Discussions regarding the Eucharist, 98. Questions concerning the baptismal service; the surplice; Presbyterian ordination; the Calendar; the Athanasian Creed, 99, 100
- Edgehill, James II.'s visit to, iii. 28
- Edgeworth, Miss, ii. 386, note

ENGLAND

- Edinburgh, riots in, ii. 371; iii. 351.
- State of (1689), iv. 262. Surrender of the castle, 361
- Eland, Lord; his spirited defence of his father the Marquess of Halifax, in the House of Commons, v. 34. His marriage to the Lady Mary Finch, vii. 170
- Eldon, Lord, on the Roman Catholic Question, ii. 497
- Election of 1660, i. 153
- of 1679, i. 245
- the second of 1679, i. 259
- of 1685, ii. 52. Controverted returns, ii. 284
- of 1689, iii. 364
- of 1690, v. 164
- of 1695, vii. 243—248. The result favourable to William III., 249
- of 1698, viii. 124—127
- of 1701, viii. 293—298
- Elections, Bill for regulating, vii. 319.
- Petitions against; the Bill passed, 320. Negatived by the King, 321. Passed by the Commons, 404. Rejected by the Lords, 406
- Elizabeth, Princess, suspected to have been poisoned, ii. 15
- Elizabeth, Queen; her supremacy, how defined, i. 58. Difficulties at her accession, 60. The leader of Protestantism, 63. Grants monopolies, 65. Her abandonment of them; her death, 65. Her conduct in the question of monopolies, vi. 132
- Elliot, a Jacobite agent, v. 360. Arrested, 364
- Elphinstone, an officer under Argyle; his misconduct, ii. 131, 132
- Enfield, Forest, i. 323
- England, early Christian, i. 6, 9. Danish invasions, 10. Under the Normans, 13. Power of (14th century), 18—20. The laws binding on the Crown, 32. But violated by the Kings, 33. The effects of the civil wars partial, 36, 37. Union with Scotland and Ireland, 65, 66. Diminished importance, 71. Long internal peace, 95. Origin and character of the two great parties, 101—105. Their first conflict, 110.

ENGLAND

The civil war, 117—123. Military domination, 124. The Commonwealth, 133. England under Cromwell, 143. Under Charles II., 186—190. War with the Dutch, 199. Indignation against Charles II., 200. The triple alliance with Holland and Sweden, 210. Loss of power and influence, 239. State of, in 1685, 290, 443. Changes, 292. Population in 1685, 293—295. Rude state of the Northern counties, 295. Rapid progress, 297. Revenue in 1685, 298. Military system, 301. The Kings were the Captains-General of Militia, 302. The Army, 305—308. Navy, 309—316. Ordnance, 317. Agriculture, 322. Wild animals, 323, 324. Agricultural produce, 326. Domestic animals, 327. Mineral produce, 328—330. Rent of land, 330. Growth of towns, 348. Country towns, 352. Manufacturing towns, 353—356. Watering places, 358—361. Kings of, after the Revolution, 378, 379. Travelling, 386, 391. First stage coaches, 392. Neglect of female education, 409. Decline of learning, 410. Scientific movement, 422, 426. Fine arts, 427, 429. State of the common people, 430, 440. Cost of food, 436. Pauperism, 436, 437. Fierceness softened by civilisation, 440. Past and present times, delusions regarding, 441, 442. Feelings of Continental governments towards, ii. 37. Dread of Roman Catholics in, ii. 259. Feelings in, on the persecution of the Huguenots in France, 250. Discontent against James II., 452. State of parties (1688), iii. 354. Rejoicings on the accession of William and Mary, iv. 2. General corruption of the Government, 63. Effect produced by the news of James II.'s persecution of Protestants in Ireland, 231. Commercial relations with Scotland, 263. Parliamentary corruption, v. 171. Prevalence thereof after the Restoration, 174. Not diminished by the Revolution, 175. Danger after the battle of Beachy Head, 242. Spirit of the nation roused, 243, 244. Excitement against the French, 288. Jealousy of the Dutch in, vi. 164. Era of fictitious plots, 177. Preparations to repel invasion, 2:2. Rejoicings for the victory of La Hogue, 249, 250. Zeal in the war against Lewis XIV., 267. Complaints of naval maladministration, 298—301. Failure of the harvest (1692), 303. Increase of crime, 304. Increase of the National debt, and of wealth, 339—342. Origin of government by a Ministry, vii. 61. Failure of assassination plots in, 291. Feeling, on the discovery of the plot against William, 299. Financial crisis in, 327—331. Conduct of the people, 338—340. Return of prosperity, 362. Restoration of the finances, 365. General anxiety during the negotiations at Ryswick, 437. Rejoicings for the peace, 438—440. The Thanksgiving Day, 443. Causes for thankfulness, 444. Dislike of all classes to a standing army, viii. 2. Pamphleteering war on the question of disbanding the army, 7. Topics of the writers in favour of immediate disbanding, 8, 9. Reply by Lord Somers, 11—16. Renewed disputes on the subject; temper of the army, 22. Commercial questions, 50. Smuggling, 51. Jealousy of Irish woollen manufacturers, 54. Early trade with Russia, 70. Relations with France, 78. Embassy to France, see Portugal. Development of the system of ministerial government, 121. Prosperity of the country under the ministry of 1695, 122. Grounds of its unpopularity, 123. Alarm in, on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 168. Suspension of diplomatic relations with Spain, 195. Previous difference on the subject of the Scottish colony at Darien. See Darien. Political animosities during the recess of Parliament, 229. Discontent in,

ENGLAND

ENGLAND

237. Agitation on the subject of the Resumption Bill, 272. Indignation on the proclamation of James III. by Lewis XIV., 290. Reaction against the Tories, 291—294. The election of 1701, 295—297
- England, Bank of, first project of, vii.
123. Clamours against, 124. Foundation of, 127. Effects of, 128. Attack on its credit, 328. General Court of, sends money to William III., 335
- England, Church of; its origin, i. 52. Was a compromise, 53—55. Its Liturgy, 53. Vestments, 55. Its relation to the Crown, 56. Its loyalty, 59. Its increased dislike of Puritans, 76. Its papistical tendencies, 79. Its ritual, how regarded by Reformers; by Churchmen under James I., 79, 80. Its condition at the Restoration, 163. Its zeal for hereditary monarchy, 185. James II.'s declaration in favour of, ii. 117. Its loyal principles, ii. 296. Under James II.; its resistance to Popery, 363, 364. Its alarm at James II.'s measures, 473. Its disputes with the King, 474. Courts the Dissenters, 476. Alienated from James II., iii. 39. Placed in a dilemma, 41, 42. Discontented with the Revolution, iv. 4. Divided into High and Low Church, 72. Divisions in regard to oaths of allegiance, v. 66. Arguments for acknowledging William and Mary, 67—70. Arguments of the nonjurors, 70—72. The clergy take the oaths, 76, 77. With exceptions, 78. See Nonjurors
- English Architecture, early, i. 20
- English Constitution, i. 17. Development of, 25. Gradual growth, 26. Not accurately defined, 31. Ancient and modern compared, 35—38. Good government under, 38
- English history, early, misrepresented, i. 26. The causes of this, 28
- English Kings; their prerogative, i. 29. Evade the limitations of them, 32, 33. Their excesses tolerated, 34, 35. Of the House of Tudor, 40, 41. De-

HUSTON

- clared heads of the Church, 56. Their ecclesiastical authority, 58. Irregularities in their succession, 74. Their powers in matters of trade, vi. 132
- English language, formation of, i. 18. Early authors in, 20
- English literature (under Charles II.); French taste in, i. 412. Its immorality, 413, 414. Comedies, 417. Dedications, 419
- English navy, origin of, i. 18
- English people, formation of, i. 17. Their military eminence, 19. Early greatness, 20
- "Englishman," a term of reproach, in the time of the Plantagenets, i. 17
- Enniskillen, resists Tyrconnell's soldiers, iv. 146. William and Mary proclaimed at, 168. Successes of the Protestants, 235
- Enniskillen Dragoons, v. 258. At the battle of the Boyne, 266
- Enniskilleners, the, reinforce Schomberg's army, v. 46
- Ephesus, Council of, appealed to in the question of the Athanasian Creed, v. 100, note
- Epping Forest, highwaymen in, viii. 110
- Ernley, Sir John, ii. 272
- Essex, wages in, i. 432. Contested election for (1865), ii. 53
- Essex, Arthur Capel, Earl of, a minister of Charles II., i. 252. Commits suicide, 279. Inquiry into the cause of his death, v. 2
- Essex, Thomas Cromwell, Earl of, ii. 207
- Essex, Robert Devereux, Earl of, ii. 207
- Essex, Robert Devereux, Earl of, son of the above, Parliamentary general; his incompetency, i. 119
- Estrees, Count of; his intended share in the invasion of England, vi. 228
- Etherege, Sir George, ii. 416
- Eucharisticon, the, vi. 38, note
- Europe, factions in, on the subject of the Spanish succession, viii. 99.
- Euston House, i. 322

EVELYN

- Evelyn, John; his remarks on the elections of 1685, ii. 55, note. Receives the Caer Peter in his House at Deptford, viii. 76
- Evertsen, Dutch admiral, joins the English fleet at St. Helen's, v. 236. His brave conduct in the battle of Beachy Head, 240
- Exchequer, the, closed by the Cabal ministry, i. 224
- Exchequer Bills, first issue of, vii. 330, and note
- Excise, produce of, i. 298
- Exclusion Bill, i. 259. Violent discussions upon, 266. Passes the Commons, 268. Rejected by the Lords, 269
- Exeter, i. 352. Jeffreys at, ii. 223. Entry of William Prince of Orange, into, iii. 227, 230. William's Court at, 248. Jacobites at, vii. 47. Contested election for, in 1698, viii. 126
- FAGEL, Grand Pensionary; his letter to Stewart, ii. 525. His draft of the Declaration to be issued by William, iii. 197
- Fagon, French physician, advises James II. to try the waters of Bourbon, viii. 280. Consulted anonymously by William III., 298
- Fairfax, Doctor, Fellow of Magdalene College, iii. 23. His firm resistance to James II., 36
- Fairfax, Thomas, Lord, i. 122
- Falkland, Lucius Cary, Viscount, his political views, i. 103. Becomes an adviser of Charles I., 108
- Fane, Sir Vere, iii. 367
- Fanshaw, Richard, Viscount, iii. 370
- Farmer, Anthony; his infamous character, iii. 20. Recommended by James II. for the Presidency of Magdalene College, Oxford, 21
- Farquhar's Recruiting Officer, i. 353, note. His picture of the feelings of society on the disbanding of the army in 1698, viii. 24
- Fauconberg, Viscount, iii. 60
- Fell, Bishop of Oxford, ii. 172
- Fenwick, Sir John, elected for Northumberland, ii. 55. Carries up the bill

FEVERSHAM

- of attainder against Monmouth, 159. Insults Queen Mary, vi. 34. Consulted by the conspirators for the assassination of William, vii. 198. His plan for bribing Porter to abscond, 345. Arrested, 347. His confession, 349—357. Its effects, 366. Examined by William III., 368. Brought to the bar of the House of Commons, 373. Bill of attainder against, 374. Brought before the Lords, 391—394. The Bill passed, 401. Attempts to save his life, 402. His execution, 404. His case made a precedent for the proceedings against Charles Duncombe, viii. 41. Grounds on which his attainder is to be condemned, 42, 43
- Fenwick, Lady Mary, conveys Monmouth's letters to her husband, vii. 390. Produces the papers, 397. Her efforts to save her husband, 402
- Ferguson, Robert; his early life, ii. 108. His character and intrigues, 109. Instigates Monmouth's rebellion, 111, 112. The author of Monmouth's declaration, 152. Advises Monmouth to proclaim himself king, 165. His strange demeanour, 170. His sermon at Bridgewater, 185. His flight, 242. And mysterious escape, 243, and note. Joins William's expedition, iii. 197. His wild conduct at Exeter, 232. Receives an appointment in the Excise, iv. 27. Becomes a Jacobite, v. 184. His intrigues with Montgomery, 317. His unfounded representations to James II., vi. 231. Arrested on suspicion, vii. 301
- Fernley, John; his trial and execution, ii. 248
- Feuquieres, his criticism of William III.'s campaign of 1695, vii. 212
- Feverisham, Lewis Duras, Earl of; at Charles II.'s death-bed, ii. 11. His operations against Monmouth, 178. Encamps on Sedgemoor, 181. His incapacity, 184. His military executions, 193. Made Knight of the Garter, 211. Commander of the forces of James II.; reports disaffection the Saint Andrew, one hundred and fifty fed the sharks of the Atlantic before Sandy Hook was in sight. The Unicorn lost almost all its officers, and about a hundred and forty men. The Caledonia, the healthiest ship of the three, threw overboard a hundred corpses. The squalid survivors, as if they were not sufficiently miserable, raged fiercely against one another. Charges of incapacity, cruelty, brutal insolence, were hurled backward and forward. The rigid Presbyterians attributed the calamities of the colony to the wickedness of Jacobites, Prelatists, Sabbath-breakers, Atheists, who hated in others that image of God which was wanting in themselves. The accused malignants, on the other hand, complained bitterly of the impertinence of meddling fanatics and hypocrites. Paterson was cruelly reviled, and was unable to defend himself. He had been completely prostrated by bodily and mental suffering. He looked like a skeleton. His heart was broken. His inventive faculties and his plausible eloquence were no more; and he seemed to have sunk into second childhood.

Meanwhile the second expedition had been on the seas. It reached Darien about four months after the first settlers had fled. The new comers had fully expected to find a flourishing young town, secure fortifications, cultivated fields, and a cordial welcome. They found a wilderness. The castle of New Edinburgh was in ruins. The huts had been burned. The site marked out for the proud capital which was to have been the Tyre, the Venice, the Amsterdam of the eighteenth century was overgrown with jungle, and inhabited only by the sloth and the baboon. The hearts of the adventurers sank within them. For their fleet had been fitted out, not to plant a colony, but to recruit a colony already planted and supposed to be prospering. They were therefore worse provided with every necessary of life than their predecessors had been. Some feeble attempts, however, were made to restore what had perished. A new fort was constructed on the old ground; and within the ramparts was built a hamlet, consisting of eighty or ninety cabins, generally of twelve feet by ten. But the work went on languidly. The alacrity which is the effect of hope, the strength which is the effect of union, were alike wanting to the little community. From the councillors down to the humblest settlers all was despondency and discontent. The stock of provisions was scanty. The stewards embezzled great part of it. The rations were small; and soon there was a cry that they were unfairly distributed. Factions were formed. Plots were laid. One leader of the malecontents was hanged. The Scotch were generally, as they still are, a religious people; and it might therefore have been expected that the influence of the divines to whom the spiritual charge of the colony had been confided would have been employed with advantage for the preserving of order and the calming of evil passions. Unfortunately those divines seem to have been at war with almost all the rest of the society. They described their companions as the most profligate of mankind, and declared that it was impossible to constitute a presbytery according to the directions of the General Assembly; for that persons fit to be ruling elders of a Christian Church were not to be found among the twelve or thirteen hundred emigrants. Where the blame lay it is now impossible to decide. All that can with confidence be said is that either the clergymen must have been most unreasonably and most uncharitably austere, or the laymen must have been most unfavourable specimens of the nation and class to which they belonged.

It may be added that the provision by the General Assembly for the spiritual wants of the colony was as defective as the provision made for temporal wants by the directors of the Company. Nearly one third of the emigrants who sailed with the second expedition were Highlanders, who did not understand a word of English; and not one of the four chaplains could speak a word of Gaelic. It was only through interpreters that a pastor could communicate with a large portion of the Christian flock of which he had charge. Even by the help of interpreters he could not impart religious instruction to those heathen tribes which the Church of Scotland had solemnly recommended to his care. In fact, the colonists left behind them no mark that baptized men had set foot on Darien, except a few Anglo-Saxon curses, which, having been uttered more frequently and with greater energy than any other words in our language, had caught the ear and been retained in the memory of the native population of the isthmus.

The months which immediately followed the arrival of the new comers were the coolest and most salubrious of the year. But, even in those months, the pestilential influence of a tropical sun, shining on swamps rank with impenetrable thickets of black mangroves, began to be felt. The mortality was great; and it was but too clear that, before the summer was far advanced, the second colony would, like the first, have to choose between death and flight. But the agony of the inevitable dissolution was shortened by violence. A fleet of eleven vessels under the flag of Castile anchored off New Edinburgh. At the same time an irregular army of Spaniards, creoles, negroes, mulattoes and Indians marched across the isthmus from Panama; and the fort was blockaded at once by sea and land.

A drummer soon came with a message from the besiegers, but a message which was utterly unintelligible to the besieged. Even after all that we have seen of the perverse imbecility of the directors of the Company, it must be thought strange that they

GRANTS

- Grants, the, adhere to William III., iv. 348. Their territory wasted by the Camerons, 355
- Granville, Dr. Dennis, conduct of James II. to, vii. 4
- Granville, destroyed by the English, vii. 230
- Grascombe, a nonjuror, his tract on the recoinage, vii. 339
- Graunt's observations on the bills of mortality, i. 293, note
- Greek learning, state of, in England in 1685, i. 411
- Greenock, Sir John Cochrane at, ii. 131
- Greenwich Observatory, i. 426
- Greenwich Palace given up for disabled seamen, vi. 251. The hospital established in memory of Queen Mary, vii. 162
- Grenville, George, his alarm at the National Debt, vi. 339
- Grey de Ruthyn, Henry, Lord, joins the northern rising for the Prince of Orange, iii. 252
- Grey, Lady Jane, i. 262
- Grey of Wark, Ford Grey, Lord. See Tankerville, Earl of
- Grindal, Archbishop, i. 52
- "Grumbletonians," vi. 308
- Guards of Charles II., i. 305, 306
- Guildford, Francis North, Earl of, Lord Keeper, his character, i. 284, 285. His scientific pursuits, 423. Obnoxious to James II., ii. 20. His dispute with Jeffreys, 29. His death, 218
- Guildhall, meeting of peers at; their declaration, iii. 295. Their deputation to William Prince of Orange, 296
- Guzot, M., papers collected by, ii. 40, note
- Guy, Henry, Secretary of the Treasury, sent to the Tower for receiving a bribe, vii. 174
- Gwyn, Sir Rowland, his motion for the Association of members, vii. 298. His defence of Somers in Parliament, viii. 253
- Gwynn, Nell, iii. 56

HALIFAX

- HABEAS Corpus Act, enactment of, i. 258. James II.'s anxiety for the repeal of, ii. 256. Value of, 256, note. Complaints of its suspension by William III., iv. 49. Suspended on the discovery of the assassination plot, vii. 298
- Hague, the, Dutch archives at, ii. 14, note. William III.'s reception at, in 1691, vi. 4, 5. Assemblage at, 6, 7. Opening of the Congress, 8
- Haines, Joseph, ii. 454
- Hale, Sir Matthew, iv. 29
- Hales, Sir Edward; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 339. Mock proceedings against; decision in favour of the dispensing power; appointed Lieutenant of the Tower, iii. 97. His conduct to the seven bishops, 105. Dismissed, 267. Accompanies James II. in his flight, 293; v. 139. Impeached by the House of Commons, v. 139
- Halifax, George Savile, Viscount (afterwards Marquess), a member of Lord Shaftesbury's administration, i. 252; his character, 252, 255. A "Trimmer," 254. Remains in office on Shaftesbury's resignation, 263. His speeches against the Exclusion Bill, 269. Resists the arbitrary measures of the court, 282. His advice to Charles II., 283. French intrigues against, 287. His contest with Rochester, ii. 4. Disliked by James II., 20, 22. Keeps aloof from Roman Catholic celebrations, 47. His foreign policy, 255. Opposes James II.'s measures, and is dismissed from the Cabinet, 265. Takes part in the debate on the King's speech, 285. Author of the "Letter to a Dissenter," 478. His conferences with Dykvelt, 509. His letter to William Prince of Orange, 520. Believed to be the writer of the "Letter to the Clergy," iii. 88. Declines to commit himself to the Revolution, 142. Invited to return to office, 203. Questioned by James II., 216. Proposes the summoning of a Parliament, 245. His inquest found that she had drowned herself while in a state of mental derangement. But her family was unwilling to admit that she had shortened her own life, and looked about for somebody who might be accused of murdering her. The last person who could be proved to have been in her company was Spencer Cowper. It chanced that two attorneys and a scrivener, who had come down from town to the Hertford assizes, had been overheard, on that unhappy night, talking over their wine about the charms and flirtations of the handsome Quaker girl, in the light way in which such subjects are sometimes discussed even at the circuit tables and mess tables of our more refined generation. Some wild words, susceptible of a double meaning, were used about the way in which she had jilted one lover, and the way in which another lover would punish her for her coquetry. On no better grounds than these her relations imagined that Spencer Cowper had, with the assistance of these three retainers of the law, strangled her, and thrown her corpse into the water. There was absolutely no evidence of the crime. There was no evidence that any one of the accused had any motive to commit such a crime; there was no evidence that Spencer Cowper had any connection with the persons who were said to be his accomplices. One of those persons, indeed, he had never seen. But no story is too absurd to be imposed on minds blinded by religious and political fanaticism. The Quakers and the Tories joined to raise a formidable clamour. The Quakers had, in those days, no scruples about capital punishments. They would, indeed, as Spencer Cowper said bitterly, but too truly, rather send four innocent men to the gallows than let it be believed that one who had their light within her had committed suicide. The Tories exulted in the prospect of winning two seats from the Whigs. The whole kingdom was divided between Stouts and

HARCOURT

- Harcourt, Simon, resists the attainder of Fenwick, vii. 377
- Harlay, French negotiator at Ryswick, vii. 423—434
- Harley, Sir Edward, iii. 274
- Harley, Robert, vii. 85. His political opinions; his narrow intellect, 87. His poetry, 90, and note. Adopts Toryism, 90. Moves a violent address to the King, 107. Proposes the establishment of a Land Bank, 323. His project breaks down, 334. His speech against the attainder of Fenwick, 377—380. Proposes a resolution for the reduction of the army, viii. 18. His motion for that purpose, 147. Obtains the lead in the House of Commons, 165
- Harris, publisher of the first newspaper, vii. 232
- Harrison, William; his description of English inns, i. 399
- Hartington, Marquess of, carries the Bill of Pains and Penalties against Charles Duncombe up to the House of Lords, viii. 40, 47. Proposes Sir T. Littleton for the Speakership, 144
- Hastings, Captain, falls at La Hogue, vi. 249. His funeral, 250
- Hastings, Warren, question raised on his trial, ii. 98
- Hastings's regiment, iv. 370, 376. At the battle of the Boyne, v. 257
- Havre, bombardment of, vii. 139
- Hawcubites, i. 375
- Hearth money, i. 298. Abolished, iv. 38
- Heathcote, Gilbert, vii. 99
- Hectors, i. 375
- Heidelberg, sacked by the French (1689); iv. 128. Second sack of (1693), vii. 52
- Heinsius, Anthony, Pensionary of Holland, iv. 70. His fidelity to William III., 71. William's letters to (1692), vi. 264, 266. His share in the treaty of Loo, viii. 137. Last letter of William III. to him, 299
- Heming, Edward: his patent for lighting London, i. 376
- Henderson, Major of Cameronians, killed at Dunkeld, iv. 391

HIGH

- Henderson, Thomas, of Paisley, v. 341, note
- Henrietta Maria, Queen; popular feeling towards, i. 106
- Henrietta, Duchess of Orleans, i. 214. Her death, 218
- Henry I. (Beauclerc), i. 14
- Henry IV.; his usurpation submitted to by the Church, v. 69.
- Henry VII.'s Statute violated in the Declaration of James II., vi. 236
- Henry VIII. retracts his breach of the laws, i. 41. His Anglican Church, 51. His views of supremacy, 56
- Herbert, Admiral. See Torrington, Earl of
- Herbert, Lord, of Cherbury, iii. 274
- Herbert, Sir Edward, Lord Chief Justice; his decision in favour of the dispensing power, ii. 339. Ecclesiastical Commissioner, 352. His conduct in the case of Bishop Compton, 353. Dismissed, iii. 6. Nominal Chancellor of James II. at St. Germain, vi. 234. Excluded from James's Council, vii. 8
- Hereditary right, not authorised by Scripture, i. 73. Nor by English history, 74
- Hesse Cassel, Landgrave of, vi. 6
- Hesse Darmstadt, Landgrave of, vi. 6
- Hesse Darmstadt, Prince George of, v. 257. At the battle of the Boyne, 260. Distinguished in the siege of Athlone, vi. 89
- Hertford, political parties at, viii. 229. Suicide of Miss Stout, 230. Trial of Spencer Cowper for the murder, 231—233
- Hewling, William and Benjamin, executed, ii. 228
- Hickes, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Hickes, George, Dean of Worcester, a nonjuror, v. 84. A nonjuring bishop, vi. 44. A noncompounder, vii. 7
- High Church party, iv. 72, 73. Resists the Comprehension Bill, 95. Its preference of the Ritual to the Articles, 98
- High Commission, Court of, abolished, iii. 205

HIGHLAND

Highland Army. See Dundee. Cannon Highlanders, Scotch, their code of morality, iv. 316. Their superstitions, 318. Their virtues, 319. Antipathy between them and the Saxons, 322, note. Feelings of the English towards, in 1745, 323. Subsequent reaction, 324, 325. Quarrels between the clans, 328. Their military character, 349. Their facility of organisation, 351. Insubordination of the chiefs, 351. Their victories undecisive, 353. Instances of ferocious revenge among, vi. 203
Highlands, ignorance respecting, at the time of the Revolution, iv. 312
Highwaymen, i. 396. Increase of, after the Peace of Ryswick, viii. 109. Prevalence of, in England, in 1698, 111
Hill, Captain, murderer of Mountford, vi. 320
Hill, Colonel, commander of Fort William, vi. 210—213
Hills, Henry, a printer of Popish tracts, ii. 365
Hoare, Roger, of Bridgewater, ii. 234
Hobbes, Thomas, i. 187
Hodges, Colonel Robert, v. 62
Hogarth's Morning, i. 372, note
Holland, war with (1667), i. 199. Prosperity of, 209. A member of the Triple Alliance, 210. Coalition of France and England against, 225. Government of, 225. Repulses the French invasion, 228. Makes peace with England, 223. Constitution of, ii. 125. Religious parties in, 421. French invasion; the Prince of Orange, afterwards William III., appointed Stadtholder, 440. Political works printed in, 524. Constitution of, iii. 157. Politics of, 170. State of feeling in, on William's success, 348. Rejoicings, iv. 3. Expenses of William's expedition repaid to, 38. Zeal of, in the war against Lewis XIV., vi. 267
Hollis, Denzil, impeachment of, i. 112
Holloway, one of the judges at the trial of the bishops, iii. 110. Delivers his opinion, 119. Dismissed from the bench, 166

HOWE

Holmes, Abraham, execution of, ii. 227
Holt, Sir John, Recorder of London; his dismissal, iii. 6. Consulted in the case of the bishops, 112. Appointed Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iv. 23. His conduct at the trial of Crone, v. 234. Presides at the trial of Preston and Ashton, vi. 17, 18. Consulted on the Bill for excluding Papists from public trusts in Ireland, 128. In the case of Whitney, the highwayman, 307
Holyrood Palace, sacked by rioters, iii. 351
Hooker, Richard; his tenets, i. 82
Hooper, Bishop, i. 52
Hopkins, Ezekiel, Bishop of Londonderry, iv. 150. Withdraws to England, 203. His death, v. 258
Houblon, Sir John, Governor of the Bank of England, vii. 334
Hough, John, elected President of Magdalene College, iii. 22. Sentence of deprivation against, 23. His interview with Penn, 33. Appears before the special Commissioners, 33. His protest, 34
Houghton, John; his Collection, vii. 231
Hounslow Heath, camp on, ii. 357. The camp broken up, iii. 161. Review of volunteer cavalry, by Queen Mary, v. 286. A resort of highwaymen, viii. 110
Howard, Edward, his "British Princes," iii. 389, note
Howard, Lord, of Escrick, ii. 103, note
Howard, Philip, Cardinal, ii. 42
Howard, Sir Robert, v. 11. His share in the debate on the Corporation Bill, 146
Howe, John, an eminent dissenting preacher; leaves England, ii. 252 and note. Returns to England; refuses to join the Court party, 484. His efforts for a coalition with the Church, iii. 81 and honour, the Tories had carried their point. They had secured against the next election the support of the Quakers of Hertford; and the consequence was that the borough was lost to the family and to the party which had lately predominated there.
Howe, John, Vice-Chamberlain to Queen

In the very week in which the great trial took place at Hertford, a feud arising out of the late election for Buckinghamshire very nearly produced fatal effects. Wharton, the chief of the Buckinghamshire Whigs, had with difficulty succeeded in bringing in his brother as one of the knights of the shire. Graham Viscount Cheyney, of the kingdom of Scotland, had been returned at the head of the poll by the Tories. The two noblemen met at the quarter sessions. In England Cheyney was before the Union merely an esquire. Wharton was undoubtedly entitled to take place of him, and had repeatedly taken place of him without any dispute. But angry passions now ran so high that a decent pretext for indulging them was hardly thought necessary. Cheyney fastened a quarrel on Wharton. They drew. Wharton, whose cool good humoured courage and skill in fence were the envy of all the swordsmen of that age, closed with his quarrelsome neighbour, disarmed him, and gave him his life.

A more tragical duel had just taken place at Westminster. Conway Seymour, the eldest son of Sir Edward Seymour, had lately come of age. He was in possession of an independent fortune of seven thousand pounds a year, which he lavished in costly fopperies. The town had nicknamed him Beau Seymour. He was displaying his curls and his embroidery in St. James's Park on a midsummer evening, after indulging too freely in wine, when a biographers makes the faintest allusion to the Hertford trial, the most remarkable event in the history of the family; nor do I believe that any allusion to that trial can be found in any of the poet's numerous letters.

young officer of the Blues named Kirke, who was as tipsy as himself, passed near him. "There goes Beau Seymour," said Kirke. Seymour flew into a rage. Angry words were exchanged between the foolish boys. They immediately went beyond the precincts of the Court, drew, and exchanged some pushes. Seymour was wounded in the neck. The wound was not very serious; but, when his cure was only half completed, he revelled in fruit, ice and Burgundy, till he threw himself into a violent fever. Though a coxcomb and a voluptuary, he seems to have had some fine qualities. On the last day of his life he saw Kirke. Kirke implored forgiveness; and the dying man declared that he forgave as he hoped to be forgiven. There can be no doubt that a person who kills another in a duel is, according to law, guilty of murder. But the law had never been strictly enforced against gentlemen in such cases; and in this case there was no peculiar atrocity, no deep seated malice, no suspicion of foul play. Sir Edward, however, vehemently declared that he would have life for life. Much indulgence is due to the resentment of an affectionate father maddened by the loss of a son. But there is but too much reason to believe that the implacability of Seymour was the implacability, not of an affectionate father, but of a factious and malignant agitator. He tried to make what is, in the jargon of our time, called political capital out of the desolation of his house and the blood of his first born. A brawl between two dissolute youths, a brawl distinguished by nothing but its unhappy result from the hundred brawls which took place every month in theatres and taverns, he magnified into an attack on the liberties of the nation, an attempt to introduce a military tyranny. The question was whether a soldier was to be permitted to insult English gentlemen, and, if they murmured, to cut their throats? It was moved in the Court of King's Bench that Kirke should either

HUDDLESTON

Mary, iv. 25. His violence and intemperance, v. 29. His attack on Lord Caermarthen (Leeds), 29. On Lord Halifax, 31. His parliamentary attack upon Bishop Burnet, vi. 369, 370. Becomes a Tory, vii. 94. His speech against the war, 268. His statement of distress in Gloucestershire, 361. His violence on the subject of the Dutch guards, viii. 173. His invectives against Lord Somers, 247. Violent resolutions moved by him in regard to the Irish forfeitures, 263, 264. His contest for Gloucestershire (1701), 297

Huddleston, John, a monk, ii. 10. Absolves Charles II., 11

Huguenots, persecution of, ii. 167. Their exiles, 269. Their treatment by James II., 332. Collection for, in England, 333. Which is frustrated by James, 334. Huguenots in Schomberg's army in Ireland, v. 85. Conspiracy among them, 50. At the battle of the Boyne, 258

Hume, David; his prediction of ruin from the National Debt, vi. 338

Hume, Sir Patrick. See Polworth, Lord Humieres, Marquess of, iii. 193. His repulse by the British troops at Walcourt, v. 62. His army threatens the invasion of England, 242

Hungerford, William Prince of Orange receives James II.'s commissioners at, iii. 281

Hunt, a smuggler; his cottage a resort of Jacobites, vii. 281

Huntingdon, Earl of, a Jacobite; his house searched, vi. 238

Huy, taken by the French, vii. 27. Retaken, 142

Hyde, Lady Henrietta, iv. 122

ICON BASILIKE, authorship of, vi. 361

Impeachment, question regarding, ii. 98

Incapacitation, Act of, iv. 364

Inclosure Acts, 325

Indemnity Bill, dispute regarding, v. 21.

Retarded by the Whigs, 138, 152.

Motion for a committee rejected, 152

IRELAND

Independents, the, i. 120; iv. 99

India, debates upon the trade with, vi.

12. Ignorance regarding, in Elizabeth's and the following reigns, 134,

135. Trade with, 136. The trade complained of by English clothiers,

146. Resumed debates, 322; vii. 97

Difficulties of private traders with, viii.

59. Montague's projected General

Company, 60—62. Violent opposition, 62. Eager subscription to the new Company's loan, 65. Renewed agitation of the subject, 160

Indian Ocean, piracy in, viii. 238

"Indulgence," the, i. 193

Indulgence, Declaration of (under Chas.

II.), i. 224. Its unpopularity, 229.

Revoked, 331. Declaration of Indulgence by James II., ii. 469. Its illegality, 471. Was a boon to the Dissenters, 472. The second Declaration ordered to be read in churches,

iii. 78. Remonstrance of the bishops,

79, 85. The Declaration read in only four London churches, 89. General resistance to, 93

Innocent XI., Pope, his dispute with

Lewis XIV., ii. 40. His advice to

James II., 42. His Jansenist tendencies, 314. His moderation towards England, 344. His dislike of the Jesuits' proceedings in England, 526. His coldness to Lord Castlemaine, 528—

530. Abolishes the right of asylum at Rome, iii. 174. His quarrels with

Lewis XIV., 176. His death, v. 64.

(Compare Rome, Court of)

Innocent XII., reconciles the Papacy to

Lewis XIV., vi. 267. His irresolute

conduct, 273

Inns, English, i. 398—400

Inverness in 1689, iv. 337

Investiture, lay, contests regarding, i.

59

Ipswich, mutiny of Scotch regiments at,

iv. 39, 40

Ireland, Norman conquest of, i. 13.

Union of, with England, 65. Long struggle in, 66. Celtic population of,

67. Treated as subject, 68. Continues Roman Catholic, 70. Acknow-

rapid elevation. To that trial both Montague and Somers were put. It was too much for Montague. But Somers was found equal to it. He was the son of a country attorney. At thirty seven he had been sitting in a stuff gown on a back bench in the Court of King' Bench. At forty two he was the first lay dignitary of the realm, and took precedence of the Archbishop of York, and of the Duke of Norfolk. He had risen from a lower point than Montague, had risen as fast as Montague, had risen as high as Montague, and yet had not excited envy such as dogged Montague through a long career. Garreteers, who were never weary of calling the cousin of the Earls of Manchester and Sandwich an upstart, could not, without an unwonted sense of shame, apply those words to the Chancellor, who, without one drop of patrician blood in his veins, had taken his place at the head of the patrician order with the quiet dignity of a man ennobled by nature. His serenity, his modesty, his selfcommand, proof even against the most sudden surprise of passion, his selfrespect, which forced the proudest grandees of the kingdom to respect him, his urbanity, which won the hearts of the youngest lawyers of the Chancery Bar, gained for him many private friends and admirers among the most respectable members of the opposition. But such men as Howe and Seymour hated him implacably: they hated his commanding genius much: they hated the mild majesty of his virtue still more. They sought occasion against him everywhere; and they at length flattered themselves that they had found it.

Some years before, while the war was still raging, there had been loud complaints in the city that even privateers of St. Malo's and Dunkirk caused less molestation to trade than another class of marauders. The English navy was fully employed in the Channel, in the Atlantic, and in the Mediterranean. The Indian ocean, meanwhile,

Captain Kidd.

HUDDLESTON

Mary, iv. 25. His violence and intemperance, v. 29. His attack on Lord Caermarthen (Leeds), 29. On Lord Halifax, 31. His parliamentary attack upon Bishop Burnet, vi. 369, 370. Becomes a Tory, vii. 94. His speech against the war, 268. His statement of distress in Gloucestershire, 361. His violence on the subject of the Dutch guards, viii. 173. His invectives against Lord Somers, 247. Violent resolutions moved by him in regard to the Irish forfeitures, 263, 264. His contest for Gloucestershire (1701), 297

Huddleston, John, a monk, ii. 10. Ab-solves Charles II., 11

Huguenots, persecution of, ii. 167. Their exiles, 269. Their treatment by James II., 332. Collection for, in England, 333. Which is frustrated by James, 334. Huguenots in Schomberg's army in Ireland, v. 85. Con-spiracy among them, 50. At the battle of the Boyne, 258

Hume, David; his prediction of ruin from the National Debt, vi. 338

Hume, Sir Patrick. See Polworth, Lord
Humieres, Marquess of, iii. 193. His re-pulse by the British troops at Wal-court, v. 62. His army threatens the invasion of England, 242

Hungerford, William Prince of Orange receives James II.'s commissioners at, iii. 281

Hunt, a smuggler; his cottage a resort of Jacobites, vii. 281

Huntingdon, Earl of, a Jacobite; his house searched, vi. 238

Huy, taken by the French, vii. 27. Re-taken, 142

Hyde, Lady Henrietta, iv. 122

ICON BASILIKE, authorship of, vi. 361

Impeachment, question regarding, ii. 98

Incapacitation, Act of, iv. 364

Inclosure Acts, 325

Indemnity Bill, dispute regarding, v. 21. Retarded by the Whigs, 138, 152.

Motion for a committee rejected, 152

IRELAND

Independents, the, i. 120; iv. 99
India, debates upon the trade with, vi.

12. Ignorance regarding, in Eliza-beth's and the following reigns, 134, 135. Trade with, 136. The trade complained of by English clothiers, 146. Resumed debates, 322; vii. 97
Difficulties of private traders with, viii. 59. Montague's projected General Company, 60—62. Violent opposi-tion, 62. Eager subscription to the new Company's loan, 65. Renewed agitation of the subject, 160

Indian Ocean, piracy in, viii. 238

"Indulgence," the, i. 193

Indulgence, Declaration of (under Chas. II.), i. 224. Its unpopularity, 229.

Revoked, 331. Declaration of In-dulgence by James II., ii. 469. Its illegality, 471. Was a boon to the Dissenters, 472. The second De-claration ordered to be read in churches, iii. 78. Remonstrance of the bishops, 79, 85. The Declaration read in only four London churches, 89. Gen-eral resistance to, 93

Innocent XI., Pope, his dispute with Lewis XIV., ii. 40. His advice to James II., 42. His Jansenist tenden-cies, 314. His moderation towards Eng-land, 344. His dislike of the Jesuits' proceedings in England, 526. His coldness to Lord Castlemaine, 528—530. Abolishes the right of asylum at Rome, iii. 174. His quarrels with Lewis XIV., 176. His death, v. 64. (Compare Rome, Court of)

Innocent XII., reconciles the Papacy to Lewis XIV., vi. 267. His irresolute conduct, 273

Inns, English, i. 398—400

Inverness in 1689, iv. 337

Investiture, lay, contests regarding, i. 59

Ipswich, mutiny of Scotch regiments at, iv. 39, 40

Ireland, Norman conquest of, i. 13.

Union of, with England, 65. Long struggle in, 66. Celtic population of, 67. Treated as subject, 68. Con-tinues Roman Catholic, 70. Acknowledges Charles II.; Cromwell's conquest of, 134. Under Charles II., 193, 194. Lord Lientenancy of, 322. Roman Catholics in, tolerated by the law, 383. Hostility of races in, 384. Celtic population and aristocracy, 385, 386. Old and New English colonists, 387. Tyrconnel, Lord Deputy, 413. Dismay of the English colonists, 415. James II.'s scheme for detaching it from England, iii. 44. Its state at the time of the Revolution, iv. 134—137. The English colonists are apprehensive of massacre, 139. News of the English Revolution arrives, 151. Devastation of, in 1689, 161. Destruction of cattle, 165. Subjection of Protestants in the south, 166. James II.'s reception, 179, 180. Persecution of Protestants, 228. The spirit of the people roused by James II.'s danger, v. 41—43. Campaign of 1691; the Pale, vi. 68. Revival of prosperity on the English side, 69. Severe measures against the Papists, 70. The Jacobite part of the island; anarchy and insecurity of property, 73, 74. Exhaustion after the war, 116. Subjection of the Celtic population, 120. State of (1698), 375. Complaints in, against James's second Declaration, vii. 18. State of (1697), 18. Whigs and Tories in, 414. Restrictions imposed by the English Parliament on the woollen manufactures of, viii. 54. The native Irish not concerned in the question, 56, 57. Dependence of the English colony on England, 57. Questions as to the disposal of the Irish forfeitures, 255. Report of the commissioners of the Commons on the subject, 256. Extravagant estimate of the value of the forfeited property, 256. Unfair report of the commissioners, 257. The commissioners take up the case of the grant to Lady Orkney, 259. The Resumption Bill, 262.

IRISH

Irish Church, the, i. 70; ii. 389

Irish emigrants in England, ii. 498

Irish exiles, vi. 117

JAMES I.

"Irish night," the, iii. 305

Irish rebellion, the, in the reign of Charles I. i. 108

Irish troops in England, dislike of, iii. 164, 305. Disbanded; disarmed, 309. Irish in the service of James II., their inefficiency from want of discipline, v. 256. Resolve to defend Limerick, 300. Their plundering excursions, vi. 75. Dissensions at Limerick, 76. Under St. Ruth, 81. Volunteer for the French service, 112. Destined to take part in the French invasion of England, 228. Regarded by the English with scorn and hatred, 230. Their bravery at the battle of Marsiglia, vii. 53

Iron works, i. 329

Islington, i. 364

JACOBITES, English and Irish, iv. 183, 184. Their want of sympathy, 185. The plots on William the III.'s departure for Ireland, v. 217. Gatherings in the North, 221. Their secret printing presses, 290. Their "Form of prayer and humiliation," 291. Which is ascribed to the nonjuring prelates, 293. Disclose the designs of Marlborough, vi. 169. Prepare for insurrection in the northern counties, 231. Division in, vii. 6. (See Compounders. Noncompounders.) Their presses and writings, 41—44. Their addresses to the sailors, 45. Resume their plots, 279. Their dismay at the Treaty of Ryswick, 439. Their indignation against Lewis XIV., 439, and note. Their attempt to proclaim James III. in London, viii. 290

Jacobites in Scotland, their party in the Convention, iv. 288, 289. Their plan of secession to Stirling frustrated, 291, 293. Their loss of weight in the Convention, 296. Take the oath of allegiance to William III., v. 322. Meeting of conspirators, 358. Their advice to James II., 359

Jamaica, earthquake in, vi. 302

James I.; his zeal for the English Church, i. 69. His diminished im-

HUDDLESTON

Mary, iv. 25. His violence and intemperance, v. 29. His attack on Lord Caermarthen (Leeds), 29. On Lord Halifax, 31. His parliamentary attack upon Bishop Burnet, vi. 369, 370. Becomes a Tory, vii. 94. His speech against the war, 268. His statement of distress in Gloucestershire, 361. His violence on the subject of the Dutch guards, viii. 173. His invectives against Lord Somers, 247. Violent resolutions moved by him in regard to the Irish forfeitures, 263, 264. His contest for Gloucestershire (1701), 297

Huddleston, John, a monk, ii. 10. Absolves Charles II., 11

Huguenots, persecution of, ii. 167. Their exiles, 269. Their treatment by James II., 332. Collection for, in England, 333. Which is frustrated by James, 334. Huguenots in Schomberg's army in Ireland, v. 85. Conspiracy among them, 50. At the battle of the Boyne, 258

Hume, David; his prediction of ruin from the National Debt, vi. 338

Hume, Sir Patrick. See Polworth, Lord
Humieres, Marquess of, iii. 193. His repulse by the British troops at Walcourt, v. 62. His army threatens the invasion of England, 242

Hungerford, William Prince of Orange receives James II.'s commissioners at, iii. 281

Hunt, a smuggler; his cottage a resort of Jacobites, vii. 281

Huntingdon, Earl of, a Jacobite; his house searched, vi. 233

Huy, taken by the French, vii. 27. Retaken, 142

Hyde, Lady Henrietta, iv. 122

ICON BASILIKE, authorship of, vi. 361

Impeachment, question regarding, ii. 98

Incapacitation, Act of, iv. 364

Inclosure Acts, 325

Indemnity Bill, dispute regarding, v. 21.

Retarded by the Whigs, 138, 152.

Motion for a committee rejected, 152

IRELAND

Independents, the, i. 120; iv. 99

India, debates upon the trade with, vi.

12. Ignorance regarding, in Elizabeth's and the following reigns, 134,

135. Trade with, 136. The trade

complained of by English clothiers,

146. Resumed debates, 322; vii. 97

Difficulties of private traders with, viii.

59. Montague's projected General

Company, 60—62. Violent opposition, 62. Eager subscription to the new Company's loan, 65. Renewed

agitation of the subject, 160

Indian Ocean, piracy in, viii. 238

"Indulgence," the, i. 193

Indulgence, Declaration of (under Chas.

II.), i. 224. Its unpopularity, 229.

Revoked, 331. Declaration of Indulgence by James II., ii. 469. Its illegality, 471. Was a boon to the

Dissenters, 472. The second Declaration ordered to be read in churches,

iii. 78. Remonstrance of the bishops,

79, 85. The Declaration read in only four London churches, 89. General resistance to, 93

Innocent XI., Pope, his dispute with

Lewis XIV., ii. 40. His advice to

James II., 42. His Jansenist tendencies, 314. His moderation towards England, 344. His dislike of the Jesuits' proceedings in England, 526. His coldness to Lord Castlemaine, 528—

530. Abolishes the right of asylum

at Rome, iii. 174. His quarrels with

Lewis XIV., 176. His death, v. 64.

(Compare Rome, Court of)

Innocent XII., reconciles the Papacy to

Lewis XIV., vi. 267. His irresolute

conduct, 273

Inns, English, i. 398—400

Inverness in 1689, iv. 337

Investiture, lay, contests regarding, i.

59

Ipswich, mutiny of Scotch regiments at,

iv. 39, 40

Ireland, Norman conquest of, i. 13.

Union of, with England, 65. Long struggle in, 66. Celtic population of,

67. Treated as subject, 68. Continues Roman Catholic, 70. Acknow-

IRISH

ledges Charles II.; Cromwell's conquest of, 134. Under Charles II., 193, 194. Lord Lientenancy of, 322. Roman Catholics in, tolerated by the law, 383. Hostility of races in, 384. Celtic population and aristocracy, 385, 386. Old and New English colonists, 387. Tyrconnel, Lord Deputy, 413. Dismay of the English colonists, 415. James II.'s scheme for detaching it from England, iii. 44. Its state at the time of the Revolution, iv. 134—137. The English colonists are apprehensive of massacre, 139. News of the English Revolution arrives, 151. Devastation of, in 1689, 161. Destruction of cattle, 165. Subjection of Protestants in the south, 166. James II.'s reception, 179, 180. Persecution of Protestants, 228. The spirit of the people roused by James II.'s danger, v. 41—43. Campaign of 1691; the Pale, vi. 68. Revival of prosperity on the English side, 69. Severe measures against the Papists, 70. The Jacobite part of the island; anarchy and insecurity of property, 73, 74. Exhaustion after the war, 116. Subjection of the Celtic population, 120. State of (1698), 375. Complaints in, against James's second Declaration, vii. 18. State of (1697), 18. Whigs and Tories in, 414. Restrictions imposed by the English Parliament on the woollen manufactures of, viii. 54. The native Irish not concerned in the question, 56, 57. Dependence of the English colony on England, 57. Questions as to the disposal of the Irish forfeitures, 255. Report of the commissioners of the Commons on the subject, 256. Extravagant estimate of the value of the forfeited property, 256. Unfair report of the commissioners, 257. The commissioners take up the case of the grant to Lady Orkney, 259. The Resumption Bill, 262.

Irish Church, the, i. 70; ii. 389

Irish emigrants in England, ii. 498

Irish exiles, vi. 117

JAMES I.

"Irish night," the, iii. 305

Irish rebellion, the, in the reign of Charles I. i. 108

Irish troops in England, dislike of, iii. 164, 305. Disbanded; disarmed, 309. Irish in the service of James II., their inefficiency from want of discipline, v. 256. Resolve to defend Limerick, 300. Their plundering excursions, vi. 75. Dissensions at Limerick, 76. Under St. Ruth, 81. Volunteer for the French service, 112. Destined to take part in the French invasion of England, 228. Regarded by the English with scorn and hatred, 230. Their bravery at the battle of Marston, vii. 52

Iron works, i. 329

Islington, i. 364

JACOBITES, English and Irish, iv. 183, 184. Their want of sympathy, 185. The plots on William the III.'s departure for Ireland, v. 217. Gatherings in the North, 221. Their secret printing presses, 290. Their "Form of prayer and humiliation," 291. Which is ascribed to the nonjuring prelates, 293. Disclose the designs of Marlborough, vi. 169. Prepare for insurrection in the northern counties, 231. Division in, vii. 6. (See Compounders. Noncompounders.) Their presses and writings, 41—44. Their addresses to the sailors, 45. Resume their plots, 279. Their dismay at the Treaty of Ryswick, 439. Their indignation against Lewis XIV., 439, and note. Their attempt to proclaim James III. in London, viii. 290

Jacobites in Scotland, their party in the Convention, iv. 283, 289. Their plan of secession to Stirling frustrated, 291, 293. Their loss of weight in the Convention, 296. Take the oath of allegiance to William III., v. 322. Meeting of conspirators, 358. Their advice to James II., 359

Jamaica, earthquake in, vi. 302

James I.; his zeal for the English Church, i. 69. His diminished im-

them to be on the watch for him. He meanwhile, having burned his ship and dismissed most of his men, who easily found berths in the sloops of other pirates, returned to New York with the means, as he flattered himself, of making his peace and of living in splendour. He had fabricated a long romance to which Bellamont, naturally unwilling to believe that he had been duped and had been the means of duping others, was at first disposed to listen with favour. But the truth soon came out. The governor did his duty firmly; and Kidd was placed in close confinement till orders arrived from the Admiralty that he should be sent to England.

To an intelligent and candid judge of human actions it will not appear that any of the persons at whose expense the Adventure Galley was fitted out deserved serious blame. The worst that could be imputed even to Bellamont, who had drawn in all the rest, was that he had been led into a fault by his ardent zeal for the public service, and by the generosity of a nature as little prone to suspect as to devise villainies. His friends in England might surely be pardoned for giving credit to his recommendation. It is highly probable that the motive which induced some of them to aid his design was genuine public spirit. But, if we suppose them to have had a view to gain, it was to legitimate gain. Their conduct was the very opposite of corrupt. Not only had they taken no money. They had disbursed money largely, and had disbursed it with the certainty that they should never be reimbursed unless the outlay proved beneficial to the public. That they meant well they proved by staking thousands on the success of their plan; and, if they erred in judgment, the loss of those thousands was surely a sufficient punishment for such an error. On this subject there would probably have been no difference of opinion had not Somers been one of the contributors.

About the other patrons of Kidd the chiefs of the opposition cared little. Bellamont was far removed from the political scene. Romney could not, and Shrewsbury would not, play a first part. Orford had resigned his employments. But Somers still held the Great Seal, still presided in the House of Lords, still had constant access to the closet. The retreat of his friends had left him the sole and undisputed head of that party which had, in the late Parliament, been a majority, and which was, in the present Parliament, outnumbered indeed, disorganised, and disheartened, but still numerous and respectable. His placid courage rose higher and higher to meet the dangers which threatened him. He provided for himself no refuge. He made no move towards flight; and, without uttering one boastful word, gave his enemies to understand, by the mild firmness of his demeanour, that he dared them to do their worst.

In their eagerness to displace and destroy him they overreached themselves. Had they been content to accuse him of lending his countenance, with a rashness unbecoming his high place, to an ill-concerted scheme, that large part of mankind which judges of a plan simply by the event would probably have thought the accusation well founded. But the malice which they bore to him was not to be so satisfied. They affected to believe that he had from the first been aware of Kidd's character and designs. The Great Seal had been employed to sanction a piratical expedition. The head of the law had laid down a thousand pounds in the hope of receiving tens of thousands when his accomplices should return, laden with the spoils of ruined merchants. It was fortunate for the Chancellor that the calumnies of which he was the object were too atrocious to be mischievous.

And now the time had come at which the hoarded ill-humour of six months was at liberty to explode. On the sixteenth of November the Houses met. The King, in his speech, assured them in gracious and affectionate language that he was determined to do his best to merit their love by constant care to preserve their liberty and their religion, by a pure administration of justice, by countenancing virtue, by discouraging vice, by shrinking from no difficulty or danger when the welfare of the nation was at stake. "These," he said, "are my resolutions; and I am persuaded that you are come together with purposes on your part suitable to these on mine. Since then our aims are only for the general good, let us act with confidence in one another, which will not fail, by God's blessing, to make me a happy king, and you a great and flourishing people."

It might have been thought that no words less likely to give offence had ever been uttered from the English throne. But even in those words the malevolence of faction sought and found matter for a quarrel. The gentle exhortation, "Let us act with confidence in one another," must mean that such confidence did not now exist, that the King distrusted the Parliament, or that the Parliament had shown an unwarrantable distrust of the King. Such an exhortation was nothing less than a reproach; and such a reproach was a bad return for the gold and the blood which England had lavished in order to make and to keep him a great sovereign. There was a sharp debate, in which Seymour took part. With characteristic indelicacy and want of feeling he harangued the Commons as he had harangued the Court of King's Bench, about his son's death, and about the necessity of curbing the insolence of military men. There were loud complaints that the events of the preceding session had been misrepresented to the public, that emissaries of the Court, in every part of the kingdom, declaimed against the absurd jealousies or still more absurd parsimony which had refused to His Majesty the means of keeping up such an army as might secure the country against invasion. Even justices of the peace, it was said, even deputy-lieutenants, had used King James and King Lewis as bugbears, for the purpose of stirring up the people against honest and thrifty representatives. Angry resolutions were passed, declaring it to be the opinion of the House that the best way to establish entire confidence between the King and the Estates of the Realm would be to put a brand on those evil advisers who had dared to breathe in the royal ear calumnies against a faithful Parliament. An address founded on these resolutions was voted; many thought that a violent rupture was inevitable. But William returned an answer so prudent and gentle that malice itself could not prolong the dispute. By this time, indeed, a new dispute had begun. The address had scarcely been moved when the House called for copies of the papers relating to Kidd's expedition. Somers, conscious of innocence, knew that it was wise as well as right to be perfectly ingenuous, and resolved that there should be no concealment. His friends stood manfully by him, and his enemies struck at him with such blind fury that their blows injured only themselves. Howe raved like a maniac. "What is to become of the country, plundered by land, plundered by sea? Our rulers have laid hold on our lands, our woods, our mines, our money. And all this is not enough. We cannot send a cargo to the farthest ends of the earth, but they must send a gang of thieves after it." Harley and Seymour tried to carry a vote of censure without giving the House time to read the papers. But the general feeling was strongly for a short delay. At length, on the sixth of December, the subject was considered in a committee of the whole House. Shower undertook to prove that the letters portance, notwithstanding the extension of his dominions, 70. His character and administration; consequences of his conduct, 71, 72. Adopts the doctrine of divine right, 73. His kingcraft, 75. His death, 86. His conduct in regard to monopolies, vi. 132

JAMES II.

James, Duke of York, afterwards James II.; his character, i. 178. Becomes a Roman Catholic, 232. Resigns the post of Lord High Admiral, 232. Marries Mary of Modena, 241. Retires to Brussels, 248. Sent into Scotland, 263. Attempt to exclude him from the succession (see Exclusion Bill). His government of Scotland, 281. His advice to Charles II., 286. His conduct in Charles II.'s illness, ii. 6, 8. Procures a Roman Catholic priest, 11. His account of Charles's death, 14, note. His speech to the Privy Council, 17. Proclaimed King, 18. His ministry at the commencement of his reign, 21. Shows favour to Jeffreys, 26. Calls a Parliament, 29. His apologies to Barillon, 31. Receives money from France, 32. Sends Lord Churchill as ambassador to France, 33. His subjection to Lewis XIV., 37. Innocent XI.'s advice to him, 42. His fluctuating policy, 43. Hears mass publicly, 46. His coronation, 47. Omissions in the religious services, 49. Tory addresses to, 50. His hatred of the Puritans, 72, 73. His feeling towards the Quakers, 78. Liberates Quakers and Roman Catholic prisoners, 84. His speech to Parliament, 90. Prepares for the defence of Scotland against Argyle, 123. His interview with the Dutch ambassadors, 124. Takes measures against Monmouth, 158. Adjourns Parliament, 162. Reviews the regiments from Holland, 173. Arrests suspected persons, 174. His interview with Monmouth, 200. With Earl Grey, 201. His partial conduct to the leading rebels, 237. His power at its height, 254. His treaty with

JAMES II.

Holland, 255. Domestic policy, 256. His army, 257. His designs in favour of Popery, 259. Impolicy of his proceedings, 263. Violates the Test Act, 264. Dismisses Halifax, 265. General discontent against, 266. Embarrassed by proceedings in France, 270. His speech to Parliament, 271. Parliamentary opposition to, 272, 280. Reprimands the Commons, 282. Attends a sitting of the Peers, 288. Prorogues Parliament, 289. Publishes papers of Charles II., 298. Parties in his court, 301—305. His mode of arguing, 316. His blind reliance on the Church of England, 317. Encouraged in his errors by Sunderland, 318. Catharine Sedley's influence over him, 324. His conduct to the Huguenot refugees, 332. His designs, 336. Dismisses refractory judges, 338. Gives preferences to Roman Catholics, 340. His designs against the Church, 344. Appoints a new Court of High Commission, 348. Discontent excited by his proceedings, 353. Forms a camp on Hounslow Heath, 357. His anger at the Scotch disturbances, 372. His negotiation with Scotch Privy Councilors, 374. His arbitrary government in Scotland, 380—382. His conduct towards Ireland, 383. Loses the opportunity of reconciling the races, 390, 391. Consequences of his policy, 393. Employs Papists in the army, 398. Displeased with Clarendon, 403. His zeal for making proselytes, 407. Dismisses Rochester, 411. Dismisses Clarendon, 413. Designs to conciliate the Protestant Dissenters, 460. 463. Grants partial toleration in Scotland, 465. His system of "closetting," 467. His Declaration of Indulgence, 469. His disputes with the Church, 474. Courts the Dissenters, 475. William's and Mary's remonstrance to, 495. His exclusive employment of Papists, 499. His enmity to Burnet, 503. Complains of Dykvelt's intrigues, 520. His disputes with

JAMES II.

William, 522. Demands the return of English troops, 523. Assigns public honours to the Papal Nuncio, iii. 2, 3. Dissolves Parliament, 3. Procures the illegal execution of deserters, 6. His attack on the rights of Magdalene College, Oxford, 20—23. On the Charterhouse, 24. His royal progress, 25. His apparently good reception, 26. At Oxford, 28. Incurs the resentment of the clergy, 39. Suggestions to him regarding the succession, 43. His scheme for detaching Ireland from the empire, 44. His hope of an heir, 45. His fear of a Protestant regency, 48. Determines to pack a Parliament, 50. Dismisses many Lords Lieutenant, 53—60. His questions to magistrates and the answers to them, 61. His attempt on the corporations, 70—74. Coerces public functionaries, 75. His design in regard to licences, 75. His second Declaration of Indulgence, 78. His interview with the bishops, 86. Hesitates, 91. Rejects Sunderland's moderate advice, 107. Receives news of the acquittal of the bishops, 123. His injustice to his daughter Mary, 148. His intended persecution of the Church, 155. His unpopularity with the clergy, 159. With the gentry, 160. With the army, 161. Brings over Irish troops, 163. Receives warnings of the Prince of Orange's designs, 186. His false security, 187. Rejects the assistance of France, 190. Becomes aware of his danger, 200. His fleet and army, 201, 202. Attempts to conciliate his subjects, 203. His interview with the bishops, 204. His concessions ill received, 206. His supposed faithless conduct in regard to Magdalene College, 208. Summons Privy Councillors and others, 209. Lays before them proofs of the birth of his son, 210. Receives copies of William's Declaration, 215. Questions the Lords in regard to it, 216. His interview with the bishops, 217. His conversation with four bishops,

JAMES II.

233—235. Receives news of Cornbury's desertion, 241. Holds a meeting of officers, 244. Goes to Salisbury, 247. Distrusts his army, 256. Retreats, 257. His arrival in London; holds a Council of Lords, 262. Appoints Commissioners to negotiate; makes further concessions, 266. Meditates flight, 267. His Commissioners at Hungerford, 281. Sends away the Queen and the Prince, 290. Prepares for his own flight, 292. His flight, 293. His memoirs, 300. Detained by fishermen, 310, and note. His demeanour, 311. Released by order of the Lords, 315. Removed to Rochester; sends a letter to William, 316. Returns to London, 318. Departs for Rochester, 326. His flight, 334. Lands at Ambletuse, 344. Arrives at St. Germain's, 345. His manifesto, 358. His letter to the Convention, 388. Effect of his measures in Ireland, iv. 139. Applies to Lewis XIV. for troops for Ireland, 171. At Brest, 176. Lands at Kinsale, 177. Enters Cork, 178. His journey to Dublin, 179. His reception, 181. His proclamation, 182. Disputes amongst his followers, 183, 186. Determines to go to Ulster, 190. His journey, and vacillating conduct, 192. Arrives before Londonderry, 194. Fired upon from the walls, 198. Summons the town, 203. Returns to Dublin, 204. His speech to the Irish Parliament, 213. Resists the repeal of the Act of Settlement, 220. Issues base coin, 222. Consents to the great Act of Attainder, 227. Prorogues Parliament, 228. Effect produced in England by his conduct, 231. Recalls Rosen from Londonderry, 240. Receives news of reverses at Londonderry, and Newton Butler, 254. His letter to the Scotch Convention, 290. His deposition declared at Edinburgh, 298. His despondency, v. 38. Rejects Avaux's advice, 40. Dismisses Melfort, 44. Offers battle to Schomberg, 49. Detaches Sarsfield into Con-

JAMES I.

portance, notwithstanding the extension of his commissions, 70. His character and administration: consequence of his conduct, 71, 72. Adopts the doctrine of divine right, 73. His kingcraft, 75. His death, 86. His conduct in regard to monopolies, 7, 132.

JAMES, Duke of York, afterwards James II. His character, 17c. Becomes a Roman Catholic, 232. Resigns the post of Lord High Admiral, 232. Marries Mary of Modena, 241. Retires to Brussels, 246. Sent into Scotland, 265. Attempt to exclude him from the succession (see Exclusion Bill). His government of Scotland, 261. His advice to Charles II, 286. His conduct in Charles II's illness, i. c. 6. Procures a Roman Catholic priest, 11. His account of Charles's death, 14, note. His speech to the Privy Council, 17. Proclaimed King, 18. His ministry at the commencement of his reign, 21. Shows favour to Jeffreys, 26. Calls a Parliament, 29. His apologies to Barillon, 31. Receives money from France, 32. Sends Lord Churchill as ambassador to France, 33. His subjection to Lewis XIV., 37. Innocent XI's advice to him, 42. His fluctuating policy, 43. Hears mass publicly, 46. His coronation, 47. Omissions in the religious services, 49. Tory addresses to, 50. His hatred of the Puritans, 72, 73. His feeling towards the Quakers, 78. Liberates Quakers and Roman Catholic prisoners, 84. His speech to Parliament, 90. Prepares for the defence of Scotland against Argyle, 123. His interview with the Dutch ambassadors, 124. Takes measures against Monmouth, 158. Adjourns Parliament, 162. Reviews the regiments from Holland, 173. Arrests suspected persons, 174. His interview with Monmouth, 200. With Earl Grey, 201. His partial conduct to the leading rebels, 237. His power at its height, 254. His treaty with

JAMES I.

Holland, 255. Domestic policy. His army, 257. His campaign of Popery, 259. Impolicy of proceedings, 263. Violates the Act, 264. Dismisses Bacon, 265. General discontent against, 266. Harassed by proceedings in 267. His speech to Parliament, 270. Parliamentary opposition to, 280. Reprimands the Commons, 282. Attends a sitting of the House, 288. Prorogues Parliament, 290. Publishes papers of Charles II's Parties in his court, 301—305. Mode of arguing, 316. His influence on the Church of England, 317. Encouraged in his error, 318. Catherine Selvi influence over him, 324. His conduct to the Huguenot refugees, 325. His designs, 336. Dismisses recalcitrant judges, 338. Gives presents to Roman Catholics, 340. His war against the Church, 344. Approves a new Court of High Commission, 346. Discontent excited by his proceedings, 353. Forms a camp, 355. His anger towards the Scotch disturbances, 372. Negotiation with Scotch Privy Counsellors, 374. His arbitrary government in Scotland, 380—382. His conduct towards Ireland, 383. Loses the opportunity of reconciling the races, 391. Consequences of his policy, 391. Employs Papists in the army, 391. Displeased with Clarendon, 403. Zeal for making proselytes, 407. Dismisses Rochester, 411. Dismisses Clarendon, 413. Designs to conciliate the Protestant Dissenters, 413. Grants partial toleration in Scotland, 465. His system of "closeting," 467. His Declaration of Indulgence, 469. His disputes with the Church, 474. Courts the Dissenters, 474. William's and Mary's remonstrance to, 490. His conduct in employing the army to suppress the rebellion, 490.

cutting personalities, named nobody on this occasion, and contented himself with declaiming in general terms against corruption and profusion. It was plain that the enemies of Somers were at once urged forward by hatred and kept back by fear. They knew that they could not carry a resolution directly condemning him. They, therefore, cunningly brought forward a mere speculative proposition which many members might be willing to affirm without scrutinising it severely. But, as soon as the major premise had been admitted the minor would be without difficulty established; and it would be impossible to avoid coming to the conclusion that Somers had violated his trust. Such tactics, however, have very seldom succeeded in English parliaments; for a little good sense and a little straightforwardness are quite sufficient to confound them. A sturdy Whig member, Sir Rowland Gwyn, disconcerted the whole scheme of operations. "Why this reserve?" he said, "Everybody knows your meaning. Everybody sees that you have not the courage to name the great man whom you are trying to destroy." "That is false," cried Brydges: and a stormy altercation followed. It soon appeared that innocence would again triumph. The two parties seemed to have exchanged characters for one day. The friends of the government, who in the Parliament were generally humble and timorous, took a high tone, and spoke as it becomes men to speak who are defending persecuted genius and virtue. The malecontents, generally so insolent and turbulent, seemed to be completely cowed. They abased themselves so low as to protest, what no human being could believe, that they had no intention of attacking the Chancellor, and had framed their resolution without any view to him. Howe, from whose lips scarcely anything ever dropped but gall and poison, went so far as to say: "My Lord Somers is a man of eminaught, 53. His negligence in winter quarters at Dublin, 212. His system of robbery and base money, 213. Sets out for his camp, 253. Retreats before William, 253. Makes a stand on the Boyne, 254. His army, 268. His flight, 268. His speech to the Lord Mayor and citizens of Dublin, 273. Leaves Ireland, 274. Arrives in France, 281. His reception by Lewis XIV., 281. His memoirs explain Marlborough's treason, vi. 171, and note. Believes himself to be popular in the English fleet, 228. Relies on Russell, 229. His vain expectations of support in England, 231. His Queen gives birth to a daughter, 232. Holds a chapter of the Garter at St. Germain's; goes to La Hogue, 233. His Declaration, 234. Proscriptions contained therein, 235, 236. Effect produced by his Declaration, 237. The Jacobites are ashamed of it, 239. Its effect on Admiral Russell, 239, 240. His interview with Grandval, 294. Returns to St. Germain's, vii. 1. His conduct to the Protestant refugees, 3—5. His paper headed "For my Son," 9, and note. Advice of Lewis XIV. to, 10. Takes Middleton into his confidence, 11. His new Declaration, 15. His insincerity, 15. The Declaration circulated; its effect, 16, 17. Prohibits mourning for his daughter Mary, 164. Change in his views on Mary's death, 196. Made privy to the project for the assassination of William, 198. Rejects the proposal to resign the crown to his son, 363. Claims to send a minister to the Congress of Ryswick; his circular to the Catholic Princes, 436. His refusal to leave St. Germain's, viii. 91. Attacked by paralysis, 280. His last illness, 281. His death, 287.

JAMES

James, Prince of Wales; his birth, iii. 98. Suspected to be supposititious, 98, 100. Sent to Portsmouth, 247. Brought to London, 287. Sent to France, 290. Proclaimed King of England by Lewis XIV., viii. 287.

JEFFREYS

Attempted proclamation of, in London, 290

Jane, a Tory divine; takes part in the conference with Roman Catholic divines, ii. 407. A member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 97, 98. Chosen Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation; his oration, 117

Jansenists, ii. 314

Jeffreys, Sir George, afterwards Lord, his charge to the Bristol magistrates, i. 350, note. His character, ii. 23. His early career, 24. Favoured by James II., 26. Made Chief Justice; raised to the peerage; his dispute with Lord Keeper Guildford, 28, 29. His conduct on Baxter's trial, 67. His Western circuit, 217. His conduct at the trial of Lady Lisle, 221, 222. At Dorchester; at Exeter; in Somersetshire, 223, 224. Number of his victims, 225. His conduct to the Hewlings, 228. To Tutchin, 229. His extortions, 232. Enduring hatred of, in the west, 243. Made Lord Chancellor, 244. In the House of Peers, 288. At the trial of Lord Delamere, 293. His duplicity to the parties in the Cabinet, 321. Made President of the New Court of High Commission, 349. His behaviour to the Fellows of Magdalene College, iii. 23. His zeal slackens, 50. Made Lord Lieutenant of two counties, 60. Advises the prosecution of the bishops, 92. Alarmed at the popular feeling in favour of the bishops, 107. James attempts to make him Chancellor of the University of Oxford, 156. One of the Council of Five, 247. Summoned to Whitehall, 268. Arrested by the rioters, 280. In the Tower; feelings of the people towards him, v. 22, 23. His interview with John Tutchin, 24. With Dean Sharp, and Doctor Scott, 25. His death, 26. His sentence upon Sir R. Armstrong, 155. His judgment in favour of the East India Company's monopoly, vi. 133 applying the Irish forfeitures to the public service. That Bill passed the Commons, and would probably, with large amendments, have passed the Lords, had not the King, who was under the necessity of attending the Congress at the Hague, put an end to the session. In bidding the Houses farewell on that occasion, he assured them that he should not dispose of the property about which they had been deliberating, till they should have had another opportunity of settling that matter. He had, as he thought, strictly kept his word; for he had not disposed of this property till the Houses had repeatedly met and separated without presenting to him any bill on the subject. They had had the opportunity which he had assured them that they should have. They had had more than one such opportunity. The pledge which he had given had therefore been amply redeemed; and he did not conceive that he was bound to abstain longer from exercising his undoubted prerogative. But, though it could hardly be denied that he had literally fulfilled his promise, the general opinion was that such a promise ought to have been more than literally fulfilled. If his Parliament, overwhelmed with business which could not be postponed without danger to his throne and to his person, had been forced to defer, year after year, the consideration of so large and complex a question as that of the Irish forfeitures, it ill became him to take advantage of such a laches with the eagerness of a shrewd attorney. Many persons, therefore, who were sincerely attached to his government, and who on principle disapproved of resumptions, thought the case of these forfeitures an exception to the general rule.

Jeffreys, Lord, son of the above, vii. 394

The Commons had at the close of the last session tacked to the Land Tax Bill a clause empowering seven Commissioners, who were designated by name, to take account of the Irish forfeitures; and the

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243. Arrested at New York, 244
- Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
- Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
- Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
- Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
- King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
- King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William III., 276
- King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
- King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 427, 438, note
- King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
- Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177. Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
- Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambs," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
- Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
- Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
- Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
- Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
- Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, i. 159
- Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
- LAGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
- Laguerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 429
- La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
- Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
- Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, v. 112. His death, 112
- Lambert, John; his ambitious views, i. 148. Abandoned by his troops, 152. Failure of his enterprise, 155
- Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
- La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
- Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies to James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
- Lancashire, Presbyterianism in, i. 164
- Increase of population in, 298. Prosecution of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 149
- Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 324
- Its failure, 331
- Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
- Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
- Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
- Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 121
- Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk vi. 290
- Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beachy Head, v. 281
- Latin language, partial prevalence of, in Britain, i. 4. Languages derive from, 69
- Latin scholarship, in England (time of Charles II.), i. 411
- Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 91

LAUDER

- His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
- Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
- Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
- Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
- Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
- League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
- Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
- Leeds, i. 354
- Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complains of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

- note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 355. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
- Leefdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
- Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
- Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
- Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
- Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243. Arrested at New York, 244
- Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
- Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
- Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
- Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
- King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
- King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William III., 276
- King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
- King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 437, 438, note
- King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
- Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177. Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
- Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambs," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
- Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
- Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
- Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
- Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
- Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, 159
- Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
- LAGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
- Laguerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 45
- La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
- Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
- Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (S Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, 112. His death, 112
- Lambert, John; his ambitious views, 148. Abandoned by his troops, 15. Failure of his enterprise, 155
- Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
- La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
- Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
- Lancashire, Presbyterianism in, i. 16
- Increase of population in, 298. Protection of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 15
- Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 32. Its failure, 331
- Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
- Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
- Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
- Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 113
- Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beach Head, v. 281
- Latin language, partial prevalence of, Britain, i. 4. Languages derived from, 69
- Latin scholarship, in England (time Charles II.), i. 411
- Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 9

LAUDER

- His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
- Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
- Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
- Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
- Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
- League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
- Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
- Leeds, i. 354
- Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complains of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

- note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 355. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
- Leeftdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
- Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
- Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
- Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
- Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243. Arrested at New York, 244
- Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
- Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
- Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
- Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
- King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
- King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William III., 276
- King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
- King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 437, 438, note
- King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
- Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177. Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
- Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambs," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
- Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
- Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
- Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
- Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
- Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, i. 159
- Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
- LAGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
- Laguerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 429
- La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
- Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
- Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, v. 112. His death, 112
- Lambert, John; his ambitious views, i. 148. Abandoned by his troops, 152. Failure of his enterprise, 155
- Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
- La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
- Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies to James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
- Lancashire, Presbyterianism in, i. 164. Increase of population in, 298. Prosecution of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 149
- Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 324. Its failure, 331
- Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
- Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
- Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
- Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 121
- Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord, commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beachy Head, v. 281
- Latin language, partial prevalence of, in Britain, i. 4. Languages derived from, 69
- Latin scholarship, in England (time of Charles II.), i. 411
- Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 91.

LAUDER

- His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
- Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
- Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
- Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
- Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
- League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
- Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
- Leeds, i. 354
- Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complains of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

- note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 355. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
- Leefdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
- Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
- Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
- Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
- Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243.
 Arrested at New York, 244
 Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
 Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
 Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
 Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384.
 His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
 Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
 King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
 King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William II., 276
 King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
 King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 437, 438, note
 King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
 Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177.
 Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
 Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambe," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
 Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
 Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
 Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
 Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
 Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, 159
 Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
L AGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
 Laguerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 48
 La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
 Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
 Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (8 Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, 112. His death, 112
 Lambert, John; his ambitious views, 148. Abandoned by his troops, 15
 Failure of his enterprise, 155
 Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
 La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
 Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
 Lancashire, Presbyterianism in, i. 16
 Increase of population in, 298. Prosecution of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 149
 Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 32
 Its failure, 331
 Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
 Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
 Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
 Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 113
 Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
 Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beach Head, v. 281
 Latin language, partial prevalence of, Britain, i. 4. Languages derived from, 69
 Latin scholarship, in England (time Charles II.), i. 411
 Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 9

LAUDER

- His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
- Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
- Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
- Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
- Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
- League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
- Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
- Leeds, i. 354
- Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complaints of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

- note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 355. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
- Leefdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
- Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
- Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
- Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
- Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243. Arrested at New York, 244
- Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
- Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
- Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
- Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
- King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
- King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William III., 276
- King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
- King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 437, 438, note
- King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
- Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177. Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
- Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambs," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
- Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
- Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
- Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
- Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
- Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, i. 159
- Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
- LAGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
- Laguerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 499
- La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
- Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
- Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, v. 112. His death, 112
- Lambert, John; his ambitious views, i. 148. Abandoned by his troops, 152. Failure of his enterprise, 155
- Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
- La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
- Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies to James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
- Lancashire, Pr. sbyterianism in, i. 164. Increase of population in, 298. Prosecution of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 149
- Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 324. Its failure, 331
- Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
- Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
- Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
- Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 121
- Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord, commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beachy Head, v. 281
- Latin language, partial prevalence of, in Britain, i. 4. Languages derived from, 69
- Latin scholarship, in England (time of Charles II.), i. 411
- Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 91.

LAUDER

His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
 Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
 Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
 Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
 Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
 League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
 Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
 Leeds, i. 354
 Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complains of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 355. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
 Leefdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
 Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
 Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
 Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
 Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish

KIDDER

242. Turns pirate; his cruelty, 243. Arrested at New York, 244
- Kidder, Richard, Bishop of Bath and Wells, vi. 45
- Kidnapping at Bristol, i. 349
- Kiffin, William, a leading Baptist; James II.'s attempt to cajole him, ii. 488, 489
- Killegrew, placed over the navy, vi. 384. His mismanagement in the matter of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38
- Killiecrankie, pass of, iv. 368. Battle of, 375, 376. Its effects, 380. Remarks on, 383
- King, Augustin, his last confession, i. 397, note.
- King, Doctor William; his loyalty; persecuted by James II., iv. 230. Arrested at Dublin, v. 249. His sermon before William III., 276
- King, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285—294. His execution, 306
- King, Gregory, on the population of England, i. 294. His calculations of agricultural produce, 326. His estimate of clerical incomes, 337. His estimate of population and food, 436, note. Of paupers, 437, 438, note
- King's Evil, touching for, v. 105, 106
- Kinsale, James II. lands at, iv. 177. Taken by Marlborough, v. 315
- Kirke, Colonel Percy; in Somersetshire, ii. 211. His "Lambs," 212. His executions, 213. Extortions; unfounded story of, 214, 215. Recalled, 216. His Protestantism, 266. Assures William III. of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244. Refuses to obey orders, 256. Sent to relieve Londonderry, iv. 234. Arrives in Lough Foyle, 236, 237. His delay, 243. Receives orders to attack the boom, 243, and note. Enters Londonderry, 247
- Kirke, his fatal duel with Conway Seymour, viii. 235. His trial; found guilty of manslaughter, 236
- Kneller, Sir Godfrey, i. 429
- Knight, Sir John; his speech against the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign

LAUD

- Protestants, vii. 111. Loses his election for Bristol, 247
- Knightley, Christopher; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Arrested, 301
- Knights' service, tenure by, abolished, i. 159
- Knox, Alexander, iii. 83, note.
- LAGOS BAY, disaster in, vii. 49. Parliamentary inquiry into, 93
- Lagnerre, Lewis, a French painter, i. 429
- La Hogue, battle of, vi. 244—248
- Lainez, a Jesuit, 312
- Lake, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, v. 112. His death, 112
- Lambert, John; his ambitious views, i. 148. Abandoned by his troops, 152. Failure of his enterprise, 155
- Lambeth Articles, the, i. 81
- La Mollonière, Colonel, v. 36
- Lamplugh, Bishop of Exeter, flies to James II. on the approach of the Prince of Orange, iii. 226. Made Archbishop of York, 241
- Lancashire, Pr. sbyterianism in, i. 164. Increase of population in, 298. Prosecution of Jacobites in, vii. 148, 149
- Land Bank, project of, vii. 323, 324. Its failure, 331
- Landen, battle of, vii. 27—30. Appearance of the field, 33
- Land Tax, origin of, vi. 325
- Langdale, Lord, Governor of Hull; arrested, iii. 273
- Langley, Sir Roger, foreman of the jury in the trial of the bishops, iii. 112, 121
- Lanier, Sir John, at the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Falls at Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Landsowne, Charles Granville, Lord commands the force on the shores of Torbay, after the battle of Beachy Head, v. 281
- Latin language, partial prevalence of, in Britain, i. 4. Languages derived from, 69
- Latin scholarship, in England (time of Charles II.), i. 411
- Laud, Archbishop; his character, i. 91.

LAUDER

His system of espionage, 92. His Liturgy for Scotland, 97
 Lauder, Sir John, of Fountainhall, ii. 376
 Lauderdale, i. 222. His administration in Scotland, 232—281. His official gains, 322
 Lauzun, Antonine, Count of, iii. 288. Aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, 290. Louvois' jealousy of him, iv. 171. Commands French auxiliaries in Ireland, v. 215. His account of the state of Ireland, 216. Opposes William III.'s right wing at the Boyne, 262. Covers the flight of the Irish, 270. Declares Limerick untenable, 297. His impatience to leave Ireland, 298. Retires to Galway, 302. Returns to France, 310
 Law, William, a nonjuror, v. 81, note
 League and Covenant, the Solemn, i. 123
 Leake, Captain John, aids in the relief of Londonderry, iv. 244
 Leeds, i. 354
 Leeds, Thomas Osborne, Duke of (Earl of Danby and Marquess of Caermarthen); becomes minister of Charles II. His character, i. 233. His policy, 234. His foreign policy, 235. Disgraced, 241. Impeached, 245. His financial good faith, 300. His official gains, 322. Restored to the House of Lords, ii. 97. Complains of James II.'s arbitrary acts, 266. His conferences with Dykvelt, 507. His letter to the Prince of Orange, 520. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 143. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Seizes York for William, 250. His scheme for proclaiming the Princess of Orange, 360, 384. Opposes the plan of a Regency, 374. His speech for declaring the throne vacant, 395. His apprehension of a Restoration, iv. 10. Made President of the Council, 17. His hostility to Halifax, 65. Raised to the marquissate of Caermarthen, 125. Parliamentary attack on, v. 29. His influence with William III., 111, 144. Becomes chief minister, 167. Satirical ballad against, 168,

LEOPOLD

note. His system of parliamentary corruption, 173. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Chief adviser of Mary, 230. His advice in the Council disregarded, 297. Hated by the Whigs, 354. Parliamentary intrigues against, 353. Slighted by William, 356. Receives information of a Jacobite plot, 363. Causes the emissaries to be arrested, 364. Lays the intercepted papers before William, 365. His absence from the division on the Place Bill; supports the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Insulted by Jacobites at Bath, vii. 47. His assistance counted on by the Jacobites, 48. Bribed by the East India Company, 50. Resists the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His speech on the Bank of England Bill, 126. Raised to the dukedom of Leeds, 132. Motion for his impeachment carried; his speech in the Lords, 185, 186. The impeachment; his defence and escape, 187, 188. His disgrace, 189. His part in the debate on the Association, 315. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. His part in the debate on Monmouth's intrigue, 398. Resigns the Presidency of the Council, viii. 182. Crown lands conferred on him; his official gains, 278
 Leefdale, an accomplice in the French plot for assassinating William III., vi. 294. Betrays Grandval, 295
 Leinster, Duke of (Meinhart Schomberg), commands William III.'s right wing at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262. Commands troops intended for a descent on France, vi. 298
 Lely, Sir Peter, i. 428
 Le Noble; his pasquinades on the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 124, note. Asserts Jeffreys to have been poisoned by William III., v. 27, note
 Leopold I., Emperor of Austria; his letters to James II., ii. 39, note; iv. 131, note. His conduct in the war against France, vi. 270. His dispute with the Elector of Saxony, vii. 421. His designs on the Spanish succession, 421. Grounds of his claim to the Spanish sacred privilege of the representatives of the people, and that we must either take the whole or reject the whole. If we reject the whole, public credit is shaken; the Royal Exchange is in confusion; the Bank stops payment; the army is disbanded; the fleet is in mutiny; the island is left, without one regiment, without one frigate, at the mercy of every enemy. The danger of throwing out a bill of supply is doubtless great. Yet it may on the whole be better that we should face that danger, once for all, than that we should consent to be, what we are fast becoming, a body of no more importance than the Convocation.

Animated by such feelings as these, a party in the Upper House was eager to take the earliest opportunity of making a stand. On the fourth of April, the second reading was moved. Near a hundred lords were present. Somers, whose serene wisdom and persuasive eloquence had seldom been more needed, was confined to his room by illness; and his place on the woolsack was supplied by the Earl of Bridgewater. Several orators, both Whig and Tory, objected to proceeding farther. But the chiefs of both parties thought it better to try the almost hopeless experiment of committing the bill and sending it back amended to the Commons. The second reading was carried by seventy votes to twenty three. It was remarked that both Portland and Albemarle voted in the majority.

In the committee and on the third reading several amendments were proposed and carried. Wharton, the boldest and most active of the Whig peers, and the Lord Privy Seal Lonsdale, one of the most moderate and reasonable of the Tories, took the lead, and were strenuously supported by the Lord President Pembroke, and by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who seems on this occasion to have a little forgotten his habitual sobriety and caution. Two natural sons of Charles the Second, Richmond and Southampton, who had strong personal reasons for disliking resumption bills, were zealous on the same side. No peer, however, as far as can now be discovered, ventured to defend the way in which William had disposed of his Irish domains. The provisions which annulled the grants of those domains were left untouched. But the words of which the effect was to vest in the parliamentary trustees property which had never been forfeited to the King, and had never been given away by him, were altered; and the clauses by which estates and sums of money were, in defiance of constitutional principle and of immemorial practice, bestowed on persons who were favourites of the Commons, were so far modified as to be, in form, somewhat less exceptionable. The bill, improved by these changes, was sent down by two Judges to the Lower House.

The Lower House was all in a flame. There was now no difference of opinion there. Even those members who thought that the Resumption Bill and the Land Tax Bill ought not to have been tacked together, yet felt that, since those bills had been tacked together, it was impossible to agree to the amendments made by the Lords without surrendering one of the most precious privileges of the Commons. The amendments were rejected without one dissentient voice. It was resolved that a conference should be demanded; and the gentlemen who were to manage the conference were instructed to say merely that the Upper House had no right to alter a money bill; that the point had long been settled and was too clear for argument; that they should leave the bill with the Lords, and that they should leave with the Lords also the responsibility of stopping the supplies which were necessary for the public service. Several votes of menacing sound were passed at the same sitting. It was Monday the eighth of April. Tues-

LESLIE

- throne, viii. 96. His dissatisfaction with the Treaty of Loo, 141
- Leslie, Charles; his "Answer to King," iv. 138, note. A nonjuror, v. 81. His account of the Quakers, vi. 30, note
- Lestrange, Roger, i. 407. Member for Winchester, ii. 85. His account of the distress of the Nonconformists, 253, note. Sent by James II. to Edinburgh, 379. His answer to the Letter to a Dissenter, 217. Removed from the post of Licensor, vi. 360. Arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the assassination plot, vii. 301
- "Letter to a Dissenter," ii. 477
- Levees, i. 380
- Leven, David, Earl of, iv. 278, 370. At the battle of Killiecrankie, 376, 378, note
- Levinz, Sir Cresswell, counsel for the seven bishops, iii. 111
- Levinge, Sir Richard, tyrannical treatment of, by the House of Commons, viii. 262
- Levison Gower, Sir John, Tory candidate for Westminster (1701); his rejection, viii. 295
- Lewis XIV.; his character, i. 207. His power alarming to the Dutch, 208. Triple Alliance against, 210. His views with respect to England, 214. His ambitious projects, 215. His policy towards England, 216. His league with Charles II., 217. Invades Holland, 228. Repulsed, 228. His intrigues against Danby, 241. Fomenters English factions, 267, 287. His transactions with James II., ii. 30, 32. General fear and hatred of, 38. His policy towards England, 39, note. His dispute with Innocent XI., 40, 42. Retracts the privileges of Protestants in France, 267. Revokes the Edict of Nantes, 268. General reprobation of his conduct, 270. His instructions to Barillon, 275. Supports the Jesuits, 314. His invasion of Holland, 440. His complicity in the designs against Burnet, 504, note. Persecutes Dutch Protestant settlers in France, iii. 170.

LEWIS XIV.

Alienates his supporters in Amsterdam, 170. His quarrels with the Pope, 174. Warns James II. of his danger, 186, 187. His exertions to save James, 188. Invades Germany, 192. His feelings in regard to the English Revolution, 343. His reception of the Queen of England, 344. His liberality and delicacy to James on his arrival in France, 346. Invades the Palatinate, iv. 126. Spares Trés at the intercession of Madame de Maintenon, 129. His unwillingness to send an army to Ireland, 170. His parting with James, 172. Appoints Avaux to accompany James, 174. His letter to Alexander VIII., v. 64. Takes Irish troops into his pay, 214. Sends French forces to Ireland under Lauzun, 115. His reception of James on his return from Ireland, 281. Burnt in effigy in London, 312. His advantages over the coalition, vi. 14. Besieges and takes Mons, 15. His quarrel with Louvois, 225. Determines to invade England, 227. Opens the campaign of 1692, 276. Reviews his troops near Mons; opens the siege of Namur, 278. Takes Namur, 280. His arrogance at its height, 281. Receives news of the battle of La Hogue; returns to Versailles, 283. Accused of participation in Grandval's plot, 296. His surprise at the liberality of Parliament to William, 326. Remonstrates with James, vii. 10. His preparations for the campaign of 1693; institutes the order of Saint Lewis, 19. His reception of Middleton, 20. At Namur, 23. Rejects Luxemburg's advice to offer battle to William; returns to Versailles, 24, 25. His want of personal courage, 26. His arbitrary reduction of the price of bread in Paris, 53. His desire for peace, 54. His reluctance to recognise the English Revolution, 55. His plan for the campaign of 1694, 133. Puts Brest in a state of defence, 135. His vexation at the misconduct of the Duke of Maine, 216. His navy confined to port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289.

LEWIS

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revision, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370.

A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revision of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36

Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.)

Assures William III. of his support

LESLIE

- throne, viii. 96. His dissatisfaction with the Treaty of Loo, 141
- Leslie, Charles; his "Answer to King," iv. 138, note. A nonjuror, v. 81. His account of the Quakers, vi. 30, note
- Lestrange, Roger, i. 407. Member for Winchester, ii. 85. His account of the distress of the Nonconformists, 253, note. Sent by James II. to Edinburgh, 379. His answer to the Letter to a Dissenter, 217. Removed from the post of Licensor, vi. 360. Arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the assassination plot, vii. 301
- "Letter to a Dissenter," ii. 477
- Levees, i. 380
- Leven, David, Earl of, iv. 278, 370. At the battle of Killiecrankie, 376, 378, note
- Levinz, Sir Cresswell, counsel for the seven bishops, iii. 111
- Levinge, Sir Richard, tyrannical treatment of, by the House of Commons, viii. 262
- Levison Gower, Sir John, Tory candidate for Westminster (1701); his rejection, viii. 295
- Lewis XIV.; his character, i. 207. His power alarming to the Dutch, 208. Triple Alliance against, 210. His views with respect to England, 214. His ambitious projects, 215. His policy towards England, 216. His league with Charles II., 217. Invades Holland, 228. Repulsed, 228. His intrigues against Danby, 241. Fomenters English factions, 267, 287. His transactions with James II., ii. 30, 32. General fear and hatred of, 38. His policy towards England, 39, note. His dispute with Innocent XI., 40, 42. Retracts the privileges of Protestants in France, 267. Revokes the Edict of Nantes, 268. General reprobation of his conduct, 270. His instructions to Barillon, 275. Supports the Jesuits, 314. His invasion of Holland, 440. His complicity in the designs against Burnet, 504, note. Persecutes Dutch Protestant settlers in France, iii. 170.

LEWIS XIV.

Alienates his supporters in Amsterdam, 170. His quarrels with the Pope, 174. Warns James II. of his danger, 186, 187. His exertions to save James, 188. Invades Germany, 192. His feelings in regard to the English Revolution, 343. His reception of the Queen of England, 344. His liberality and delicacy to James on his arrival in France, 346. Invades the Palatinate, iv. 126. Spares Trêves at the intercession of Madame de Maintenon, 129. His unwillingness to send an army to Ireland, 170. His parting with James, 172. Appoints Avaux to accompany James, 174. His letter to Alexander VIII., v. 64. Takes Irish troops into his pay, 214. Sends French forces to Ireland under Lauzun, 115. His reception of James on his return from Ireland, 281. Burnt in effigy in London, 312. His advantages over the coalition, vi. 14. Besieges and takes Mons, 15. His quarrel with Louvois, 225. Determines to invade England, 227. Opens the campaign of 1692, 276. Reviews his troops near Mons; opens the siege of Namur, 278. Takes Namur, 280. His arrogance at its height, 281. Receives news of the battle of La Hogue; returns to Versailles, 283. Accused of participation in Grandval's plot, 296. His surprise at the liberality of Parliament to William, 326. Remonstrates with James, vii. 10. His preparations for the campaign of 1693; institutes the order of Saint Lewis, 19. His reception of Middleton, 20. At Namur, 23. Rejects Luxemburg's advice to offer battle to William; returns to Versailles, 24, 25. His want of personal courage, 26. His arbitrary reduction of the price of bread in Paris, 53. His desire for peace, 54. His reluctance to recognise the English Revolution, 55. His plan for the campaign of 1694, 133. Puts Brest in a state of defence, 135. His vexation at the misconduct of the Duke of Maine, 216. His navy confined to

LEWIS

- port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289
- Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68
- Lexington, Lord, iii. 395
- Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304
- L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340
- Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168
- Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200
- Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425
- "Lillibullero," iii. 169
- Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnell arrives, 305.

LLOYD

- Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130
- Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356
- "Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47
- Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240
- Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395
- Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354
- Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217
- Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4
- Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135
- Littlecote Hall, iii. 282
- Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181
- Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101
- Liverpool, i. 357
- Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319
- Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63
- Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36
- Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

LESLIE

- throne, viii. 96. His dissatisfaction with the Treaty of Loo, 141
- Leslie, Charles; his "Answer to King," iv. 138, note. A nonjuror, v. 81. His account of the Quakers, vi. 30, note
- Lestrange, Roger, i. 407. Member for Winchester, ii. 85. His account of the distress of the Nonconformists, 253, note. Sent by James II. to Edinburgh, 379. His answer to the Letter to a Dissenter, 217. Removed from the post of Licensor, vi. 360. Arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the assassination plot, vii. 301
- "Letter to a Dissenter," ii. 477
- Leves, i. 380
- Leven, David, Earl of, iv. 278, 370. At the battle of Killiecrankie, 376, 378, note
- Levinz, Sir Cresswell, counsel for the seven bishops, iii. 111
- Levinge, Sir Richard, tyrannical treatment of, by the House of Commons, viii. 262
- Levison Gower, Sir John, Tory candidate for Westminster (1701); his rejection, viii. 295
- Lewis XIV.; his character, i. 207. His power alarming to the Dutch, 208. Triple Alliance against, 210. His views with respect to England, 214. His ambitious projects, 215. His policy towards England, 216. His league with Charles II., 217. Invades Holland, 228. Repulsed, 228. His intrigues against Danby, 241. Foment English factions, 267, 287. His transactions with James II., ii. 30, 32. General fear and hatred of, 38. His policy towards England, 39, note. His dispute with Innocent XI., 40, 42. Retracts the privileges of Protestants in France, 267. Revokes the Edict of Nantes, 268. General reprobation of his conduct, 270. His instructions to Barillon, 275. Supports the Jesuits, 314. His invasion of Holland, 440. His complicity in the designs against Burnet, 504, note. Persecutes Dutch Protestant settlers in France, iii. 170.

LEWIS XIV.

Alienates his supporters in Amsterdam, 170. His quarrels with the Pope, 174. Warns James II. of his danger, 186, 187. His exertions to save James, 188. Invades Germany, 192. His feelings in regard to the English Revolution, 343. His reception of the Queen of England, 344. His liberality and delicacy to James on his arrival in France, 346. Invades the Palatinate, iv. 126. Spares Tréves at the intercession of Madame de Maintenon, 129. His unwillingness to send an army to Ireland, 170. His parting with James, 172. Appoints Avaux to accompany James, 174. His letter to Alexander VIII., v. 64. Takes Irish troops into his pay, 214. Sends French forces to Ireland under Lauzun, 115. His reception of James on his return from Ireland, 281. Burnt in effigy in London, 312. His advantages over the coalition, vi. 14. Besieges and takes Mons, 15. His quarrel with Louvois, 225. Determines to invade England, 227. Opens the campaign of 1692, 276. Reviews his troops near Mons; opens the siege of Namur, 278. Takes Namur, 280. His arrogance at its height, 281. Receives news of the battle of La Hogue; returns to Versailles, 283. Accused of participation in Grandval's plot, 296. His surprise at the liberality of Parliament to William, 326. Remonstrates with James, vii. 10. His preparations for the campaign of 1693; institutes the order of Saint Lewis, 19. His reception of Middleton, 20. At Namur, 23. Rejects Luxemburg's advice to offer battle to William; returns to Versailles, 24, 25. His want of personal courage, 26. His arbitrary reduction of the price of bread in Paris, 53. His desire for peace, 54. His reluctance to recognise the English Revolution, 55. His plan for the campaign of 1694, 133. Puts Brest in a state of defence, 135. His vexation at the misconduct of the Duke of Maine, 216. His navy confined to port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289

LEWIS

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revision, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnell arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revision of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36

Lloyd, William, Bishop of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

believe," so Vernon wrote the next day, "I believe there was not one man in the House that did not think the nation ruined." The lobbies were cleared: the back doors were locked: the keys were laid on the table: the Serjeant at Arms was directed to take his post at the front door, and to suffer no member to withdraw. An awful interval followed, during which the angry passions of the assembly seemed to be subdued by terror. Some of the leaders of the opposition, men of grave character and of large property, stood aghast at finding that they were engaged, — they scarcely knew how, — in a conflict such as they had not at all expected, in a conflict in which they could be victorious only at the expense of the peace and order of society. Even Seymour was sobered by the greatness and nearness of the danger. Even Howe thought it advisable to hold conciliatory language. It was no time, he said, for wrangling. Court party and country party were Englishmen alike. Their duty was to forget all past grievances, and to cooperate heartily for the purpose of saving the country.

In a moment all was changed. A message from the Lords was announced. It was a message which lightened many heavy hearts. The bill had been passed without amendments.

The leading malecontents, who, a few minutes before, scared by finding that their violence had brought on a crisis for which they were not prepared, had talked about the duty of mutual forgiveness and close union, instantly became again as rancorous as ever. One danger, they said, was over. So far well. But it was the duty of the representatives of the people to take such steps as might make it impossible that there should ever again be such danger. Every adviser of the Crown, who had been concerned in the procuring or passing of any exorbitant grant, ought to be ex-

Somers again
attacked.

LEWIS

port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302.

The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36

Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

Only a hundred and six members went into the lobby with Musgrave; a hundred and sixty seven voted against him. Such a division, in such a House of Commons, and on such a day, is sufficient evidence of the respect which the great qualities of Somers had extorted even from his political enemies.

The clerk then went on with the list. The Lord President and the Lord Privy Seal, who were well known to have stood up strongly for the privileges of the Lords, were reviled by some angry members; but no motion was made against either. And soon the Tories became uneasy in their turn: for the name of the Duke of Leeds was read. He was one of themselves. They were very unwilling to put a stigma on him. Yet how could they, just after declaiming against the Chancellor for accepting a very moderate and well earned provision, undertake the defence of a statesman who had, out of grants, pardons and bribes, accumulated a princely fortune. There was actually on the table evidence that His Grace was receiving from the bounty of the Crown more than thrice as much as had been bestowed on Somers; and nobody could doubt that His Grace's secret gains had very far exceeded those of which there was evidence on the table. It was accordingly moved that the House, which had indeed been sitting many hours, should adjourn. The motion was lost; but neither party was disposed to move that the consideration of the list should be resumed. It was however resolved, without a division, that an address should be presented to the King, requesting that no person not a native of his dominions, Prince George excepted, might be admitted to the Privy Council either of England or of Ireland. The evening was now far spent. The candles had been some time lighted; and the House rose. So ended one of the most anxious, turbulent, and variously eventful days in the long Parliamentary History of England.

LEWIS

port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermilage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Dounel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary. vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, vi. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 86

Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

THE health of James had been during some years declining: and he had at length, on Good Friday, 1701, suffered a shock from which he had never recovered. While he was listening in his chapel to the solemn service of the day, he fell down in a fit, and remained long insensible. Some people imagined that the words of the anthem which his choristers were chanting had produced in him emotions too violent to be borne by an enfeebled body and mind. For that anthem was taken from the plaintive elegy in which a servant of the true God, chastened by many sorrows and humiliations, banished, homesick, and living on the bounty of strangers, bewailed the fallen throne and the desolate Temple of Sion: "Remember, O Lord, what is come upon us; consider and behold our reproach. Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens; the crown is fallen from our head. Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever?"

The King's malady proved to be paralytic. Fagon, the first physician of the French Court, and, on medical questions, the oracle of all Europe, prescribed the waters of Bourbon. Lewis, with all his usual generosity, sent to Saint Germain ten thousand crowns in gold for the charges of the journey, and gave orders that every town along the road should receive his good brother with all the honours due to royalty.*

* Life of James; St. Simon; Dangeau.

James, after passing some time at Bourbon, returned to the neighbourhood of Paris with health so far reestablished that he was able to take exercise on horseback, but with judgment and memory evidently impaired. On the thirteenth of September, he had a second fit in his chapel; and it soon became clear that this was a final stroke. He rallied the last energies of his failing body and mind to testify his firm belief in the religion for which he had sacrificed so much. He received the last sacraments with every mark of devotion, exhorted his son to hold fast to the true faith in spite of all temptations, and entreated Middleton, who, almost alone among the courtiers assembled in the bed-chamber, professed himself a Protestant, to take refuge from doubt and error in the bosom of the one infallible Church. After the extreme unction had been administered, James declared that he pardoned all his enemies, and named particularly the Prince of Orange, the Princess of Denmark, and the Emperor. The Emperor's name he repeated with peculiar emphasis: "Take notice, father," he said to the confessor, "that I forgive the Emperor with all my heart." It may perhaps seem strange that he should have found this the hardest of all exercises of Christian charity. But it must be remembered that the Emperor was the only Roman Catholic Prince still living who had been accessory to the Revolution, and that James might not unnaturally consider Roman Catholics who had been accessory to the Revolution as more inexcusably guilty than heretics who might have deluded themselves into the belief that, in violating their duty to him, they were discharging their duty to God.

While James was still able to understand what was said to him, and make intelligible answers, Lewis visited him twice. The English exiles observed that the Most Christian King was to the last considerate and kind in the very slightest matters which concerned his unfortunate guest. He would not allow his coach to enter the court of Saint Germain, lest the noise of the wheels should be heard in the sick room. In both interviews he was gracious, friendly, and even tender. But he carefully abstained from saying anything about the future position of the family which was about to lose its head. Indeed he could say nothing: for he had not yet made up his own mind. Soon, however, it became necessary for him to form some resolution. On the sixteenth James sank into a stupor which indicated the near approach of death. While he lay in this helpless state, Madame de Maintenon visited his consort. To this visit many persons who were likely to be well informed attributed a long series of great events. We cannot wonder that a woman should have been moved to pity by the misery of a woman; that a devout Roman Catholic should have taken a deep interest in the fate of a family persecuted, as she conceived, solely for being Roman Catholics; or that the pride of the widow of Scarron should have been intensely gratified by the supplications of a daughter of Este and a Queen of England. From mixed motives, probably, the wife of Lewis promised her powerful protection to the wife of James.

Madame de Maintenon was just leaving Saint Germain when, on the brow of the hill which overlooks the valley of the Seine, she met her husband, who had come to ask after his guest. It was probably at this moment that he was persuaded to form a resolution, of which neither he nor she by whom he was governed foresaw the consequences. Before he announced that resolution, however, he observed all the decent forms of deliberation. A council was held that evening at Marli, and was attended by the princes of the blood and by the ministers of state. The question was propounded, whether, when God should take James the Second of England to himself, France should recognise the Pretender as King James the Third?

The ministers were, one and all, against the recognition. Indeed, it seems difficult to understand how any person who had any pretensions to the name of statesman should have been of a different opinion. Torcy took his stand on the ground that to recognise the Prince of Wales would be to violate the Treaty of Ryswick. This was indeed an impregnable position. By that treaty His Most Christian Majesty had bound himself to do nothing which could, directly or indirectly, disturb the existing order of things in England. And in what way, except by an actual invasion, could he do more to disturb the existing order of things in England than by solemnly declaring in the face of the whole world, that he did not consider that order of things as legitimate, that he regarded the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement as nullities, and the King in possession as an usurper? The recognition would then be a breach of faith: and, even if all considerations of morality were set aside, it was plain that it would, at that moment be wise in the French government to avoid everything which could with plausibility be represented as a breach of faith. The crisis was a very peculiar one. The great diplomatic victory won by France in the preceding year had excited the fear and hatred of her neighbours. Nevertheless there was, as yet, no great coalition against her. The House of Austria, indeed, had appealed to arms. But with the House of Austria alone the House of Bourbon could easily deal. Other powers were still looking in doubt to England for the signal; and England, though her aspect was sullen and menacing, still preserved neutrality. That neutrality would not have lasted so long, if William could have relied on the support of his Parliament and of his people. In his Parliament there were agents of France, who, though few, had obtained so much influence by clamouring against standing armies, profuse grants, and Dutch favourites, that they were often blindly followed by the majority; and his people, distracted by domestic factions, unaccustomed to busy themselves about continental politics, and remembering with bitterness the disasters and burdens of the last war, the carnage of Landen, the loss of the Smyrna fleet, the land tax at four shillings in the pound, hesitated about engaging in another contest, and would probably continue to hesitate while he continued to live. He could not live long. It had, indeed, often been prophesied that his death was at hand; and the prophets had hitherto been mistaken. But there was now no possibility of mistake. His cough was more violent than ever; his legs were swollen; his eyes, once bright and clear as those of a falcon, had grown dim; he who, on the day of the Boyne, had been sixteen hours on the backs of different horses, could now with great difficulty creep into his state coach.* The vigorous intellect, and the intrepid spirit, remained; but on the body fifty years had done the work of ninety. In a few months the vaults of Westminster would receive the emaciated and shattered frame which was animated by the most far-sighted, the most daring, the most commanding of souls. In a few months the British throne would be filled by a woman whose understanding was well known to be feeble, and who was believed to lean towards the party which was averse from war. To get over those few months without an open and violent rupture should have been the first object of the French government. Every engagement should have been punctually fulfilled: every occasion of quarrel should have been

* Poussin to Torcy, ^{April 28.}
1701. ^{May 8.} "Le roi d'Angleterre
tousse plus qu'il n'a jamais fait,
et ses jambes sont fort enflées.
Je le vis hier sortir du préche de

Saint James. Je le trouve fort cassé, les yeux éteints, et il eut beaucoup de peine à monter en
carosse."

LEWIS

port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289.

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370.

A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36

Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.)

Assures William III. of his support

one side were the faith of treaties, the peace of Europe, the welfare of France, nay the selfish interest of the House of Bourbon. On the other side were the influence of an artful woman, and the promptings of vanity which, we must in candour acknowledge, was ennobled by a mixture of compassion and chivalrous generosity. The King determined to act in direct opposition to the advice of all his ablest servants; and the princes of the blood applauded his decision, as they would have applauded any decision which he had announced. Nowhere was he regarded with a more timorous, a more slavish, respect than in his own family.

On the following day he went again to Saint Germain, and, attended by a splendid retinue, entered James's bedchamber. The dying man scarcely opened his heavy eyes, and then closed them again. "I have something," said Lewis, "of great moment to communicate to Your Majesty." The courtiers who filled the room took this as a signal to retire, and were crowding towards the door, when they were stopped by that commanding voice: "Let nobody withdraw. I come to tell Your Majesty that, whenever it shall please God to take you from us, I will be to your son what I have been to you, and will acknowledge him as King of England, Scotland and Ireland." The English exiles who were standing round the couch fell on their knees. Some burst into tears. Some poured forth praises and blessings with clamour such as was scarcely becoming in such a place and at such a time. Some indistinct murmurs which James uttered, and which were drowned by the noisy gratitude of his attendants, were interpreted to mean thanks. But from the most trustworthy accounts it appears that he was insensible to all that was passing around him.*

* By the most trustworthy accounts I mean those of St. Simon and Dangeau. The reader may compare their narratives with the Life of James.

As soon as Lewis was again at Marli, he repeated to the Court assembled there the announcement which he had made at Saint Germain. The whole circle broke forth into exclamations of delight and admiration. What piety! What humanity! What magnanimity! Nor was this enthusiasm altogether feigned. For, in the estimation of the greater part of that brilliant crowd, nations were nothing and princes everything. What could be more generous, more amiable, than to protect an innocent boy, who was kept out of his rightful inheritance by an ambitious kinsman? The fine gentlemen and fine ladies who talked thus forgot that, besides the innocent boy and that ambitious kinsman, five millions and a half of Englishmen were concerned, who were little disposed to consider themselves as the absolute property of any master, and who were still less disposed to accept a master chosen for them by the French King.

James lingered three days longer. He was occasionally sensible during a few minutes, and, during one of these lucid intervals, faintly expressed his gratitude to Lewis. On the sixteenth he died. His Queen retired that evening to the nunnery of Chaillot, where she could weep and pray undisturbed. She left Saint Germain in joyous agitation. A herald made his appearance before the palace gate, and, with sound of trumpet, proclaimed, in Latin, French and English, King James the Third of England and Eighth of Scotland. The streets, in consequence doubtless of orders from the government, were illuminated; and the townsmen with loud shouts wished a long reign to their illustrious neighbour. The poor lad received from his ministers, and delivered back to them, the seals of their offices, and held out his hand to be kissed. One of the first acts of his mock reign was to bestow some mock peerages in conformity with directions which he found in his father's will. Middleton, who had as yet no English title, was created Earl of Monmouth. Perth, who had stood high in the favour of his late master, both as an apostate from the Protestant religion, and as the author of the last improvements on the thumb screw, took the title of Duke.

Meanwhile the remains of James were escorted, in the dusk of the evening, by a slender retinue to the Chapel of the English Benedictines at Paris, and deposited there in the vain hope that, at some future time, they would be laid with kingly pomp at Westminster among the graves of the Plantagenets and Tudors.

Three days after these humble obsequies Lewis visited Saint Germain in form. On the morrow the visit was returned. The French Court was now at Versailles; and the Pretender was received there, in all points, as his father would have been, sate in his father's arm chair, took, as his father had always done, the right hand of the great monarch, and wore the long violet coloured mantle which was by ancient usage the mourning garb of the Kings of France. There was on that day a great concourse of ambassadors and envoys; but one well known figure was wanting. Manchester had sent off to Loo intelligence of the affront which had been offered to his country and his master, had solicited instructions, and had determined that, till these instructions should arrive, he would live in strict seclusion. He did not think that he should be justified in quitting his post without express orders; but his earnest hope was that he should be directed to turn his back in contemptuous defiance on the Court which had dared to treat England as a subject province.

As soon as the fault into which Lewis had been hurried by pity, by the desire of applause, and by female influence was complete and irreparable, he

The Pretender recognised as King.

LEWIS

- port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289
- Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68
- Lexington, Lord, iii. 395
- Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304
- L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340
- Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168
- Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200
- Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425
- "Lillibullero," iii. 169
- Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnell arrives, 305.

LLOYD

- Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130
- Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356
- "Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47
- Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240
- Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395
- Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354
- Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217
- Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4
- Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135
- Littlecote Hall, iii. 282
- Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181
- Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101
- Liverpool, i. 357
- Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319
- Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63
- Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36
- Lloyd, William, Bishop of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

duced a burst of public indignation which scarcely any malecontent had the courage to face.

In the city of London, indeed, some zealots, who had probably swallowed too many bumpers to their new Sovereign, played one of those senseless pranks which were characteristic of their party. They dressed themselves in coats bearing some resemblance to the tabards of heralds, rode through the streets, halted at some places, and muttered something which nobody could understand. It was at first supposed that they were merely a company of prize fighters from Hockley in the Hole who had taken this way of advertising their performances with back sword, sword and buckler, and single falchion. But it was soon discovered that these gaudily dressed horsemen were proclaiming James the Third. In an instant the pageant was at an end. The mock kings at arms and pursuivants threw away their finery and fled for their lives in all directions, followed by yells and showers of stones.* Already the Common Council of London had met, and had voted, without one dissentient voice, an address expressing the highest resentment at the insult which France had offered to the King and the kingdom. A few hours after this address had been presented to the Regents, the Livery assembled to choose a Lord Mayor. Duncombe, the Tory candidate, lately the popular favourite, was rejected, and a Whig alderman placed in the chair. All over the kingdom, corporations, grand juries, meetings of magistrates, meetings of freeholders, were passing resolutions breathing affection to William, and defiance to Lewis. It was necessary to enlarge the "London Gazette" from four columns to twelve; and even twelve were too few to hold the multitude of loyal and patriotic addresses. In some of those addresses severe reflections were thrown on

* Lettres Historiques Mois de Novembre 1701

LEWIS

- port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289.
- Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68
- Lexington, Lord, iii. 395
- Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304
- L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340
- Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168
- Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200
- Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425
- "Lillibullero," iii. 169
- Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

- Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130
- Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356
- "Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47
- Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240
- Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395
- Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370. A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354
- Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217
- Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4
- Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135
- Littlecote Hall, iii. 282
- Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181
- Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101
- Liverpool, i. 357
- Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319
- Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63
- Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36
- Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Assures William III. of his support

boundless. These then were the true English patriots, the men who could not endure a foreigner, the men who would not suffer His Majesty to bestow a moderate reward on the foreigners who had stormed Athlone, and turned the flank of the Celtic army at Aghrim. It now appeared they could be on excellent terms with a foreigner, provided only that he was the emissary of a tyrant hostile to the liberty, the independence, and the religion of their country. The Tories, vexed and abashed, heartily wished that, on that unlucky day, their friends had been supping somewhere else. Even the bronze of Davenant's forehead was not proof to the general reproach. He defended himself by pretending that Poussin, with whom he had passed whole days, who had corrected his scurrilous pamphlets, and who had paid him his shameful wages, was a stranger to him, and that the meeting at the Blue Posts was purely accidental. If his word was doubted, he was willing to repeat his assertion on oath. The public, however, which had formed a very correct notion of his character, thought that his word was worth as much as his oath, and that his oath was worth nothing.

Meanwhile the arrival of William was impatiently expected. From Loo he had gone to Return of the King. Breda, where he had passed some time in reviewing his troops, and in conferring with Marlborough and Heinsius. He had hoped to be in England early in October. But adverse winds detained him three weeks at the Hague. At length, in the afternoon of the fourth of November, it was known in London that he had landed early that morning at Margate. Great preparations were made for welcoming him to his capital on the following day, the thirteenth anniversary of his landing in Devonshire. But a journey across the bridge, and along Cornhill and Cheapside, Fleet Street, and the Strand, would have been too great an effort for his enfeebled frame. He port, 230. Exhaustion of his finances, 326. Agrees to recognise William as King, 364. Offers terms of peace, 420. His reception of the Duke of Portland as English ambassador, viii. 87. Refuses to remove James II. from St. Germain's, 88. His denial of the charge of countenancing assassins, 90. His renunciation of the Spanish succession, 97, and note. His despatches to Tallard during the negotiations on the Spanish succession at Leo, 133, note. His new propositions on the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 186. Subserviency of the Spanish ministers to (1699), 193. His considerate attention to James II. in his last illness, 280—282. Question as to his recognition of James III., 283—285. Announces his resolution to do so, to James II., 286. Proclaims the Prince of Wales King, 287. Visits him in state at St. Germain's, 288. Attempts to excuse his conduct, 289.

LEWIS

Lewis, Prince of Baden; his victories over the Turks in 1689, v. 61. And again in 1691, vi. 68

Lexington, Lord, iii. 395

Leyburn, John, Vicar Apostolic in England, ii. 374, 407. His advice to James II., iii. 206. Arrested by rioters, 304

L'Hermitage; his account of the conduct of the English people in the financial crisis, vii. 340

Licensing Act, vi. 360. The booksellers' petition against it, 373. Abolished, vii. 168

Lieutenancy, commissions of, v. 180. Agitation in London caused by their revival, 181, 182. Debates upon, 200

Lilienroth, Swedish Minister; his conference with Dykvelt and Callieres, vii. 363. Mediator at Ryswick, 425

"Lillibullero," iii. 169

Limerick, the Irish army collected at, v. 297. Question of defending it, 298, 301. Arrival of William III.; appearance and situation of the town, 302. The first siege; exploit of Sarsfield, 304. Baldearg O'Donnel arrives, 305.

LLOYD

Assault repulsed; the siege raised, 309. Dissensions among the defenders, vi. 76. Scarcity in, 80. Arrival of French succours, 80. Second siege, 101—103. Capitulates; the conditions; the garrison have the option of entering the French service, 108. Persuasions addressed to them, 110, 111. The majority volunteer for France, 112. Question regarding the treaty, 127—130

Lime Street, Roman Catholic chapel in, ii. 356

"Limp," a Jacobite sign; its significance, vii. 47

Lincoln, William III.'s visit to, vii. 240

Lincoln, Edward Clinton, Earl of, iii. 395

Lincoln's Inn Fields, houses in, i. 370.

A resort of beggars and mountebanks, 372. Franciscan Establishment in, ii. 354

Lindsay, Lieutenant; his part in the massacre of Glencoe, vi. 215—217

Lisle, Alice, harbours fugitive rebels, ii. 218. Her trial, 220—222. Put to death, 223. Her attainder reversed, v. 4

Lisle, John, assassinated, v. 135

Littlecote Hall, iii. 282

Littleton, Sir Thomas, iii. 365. His speech on William III.'s use of the veto, vii. 108. Supports Fenwick's attainder, 412. Made Lord of the Treasury, 412. Chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, viii. 144. Appointed Treasurer of the Navy, 181

Liturgy, Laud's, for Scotland, i. 97. Proposed revival of the Liturgy of the Church of England, iv. 114; v. 101

Liverpool, i. 357

Livingstone, Sir Thomas, surprises the Highlanders under Buchan, v. 319

Lloyd, David, a Jacobite emissary, vi. 57—63

Lloyd, William, Bishop of Norwich, iii. 84. A nonjuror, v. 78. His conversation with Sir John Trevor, vi. 36

Lloyd, William, Bishop, of St. Asaph, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.)

Assures William III. of his support

LOANS

180. His disbelief of the legitimacy of the Prince of Wales, 211. Assists at the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 122. A member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 98. Translated to the see of Worcester, viii. 175
- Loans, government, antiquity of, i. 300
- Lobb, Stephen, ii. 482
- Lochbuy, Maclean of, iv. 345
- Lochiel. See Cameron, Sir Ewan
- Locke, John; keeps aloof from the plots of the British refugees on the Continent in 1685, ii. 122. Ejected from his Fellowship; his letter on Toleration, 123. Excepts Roman Catholics from claim to Toleration, 262. His dedication to the Earl of Pembroke, v. 179. His alleged part against renewing the Licensing Act, vii. 260, note. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260. His paper in answer to Lowndes; his proposed expedient, 263, 264
- Lockhart, Sir George, Lord President of the Court of Session, ii. 373. Resists James II.'s policy, 374—377. Lord President of the Court of Session; his murder, iv. 302
- Lockhart, Sir William, iv. 308
- Lollards; their movement premature, i. 46
- London, indignation in, against Charles I., i. 113. The Plague and Fire, 200. Proceedings against the corporation, 275. Disfranchised, 279. Consumption of coal in, 330. The London clergy, 344. London in the time of Charles II., 362, 384. Population; customs, 362. The city, 364. Architecture; the streets, 364. The merchants; subsequent change in their habits, 365. Festivities, 367. Power of the city, 368. The trainbands, 369. Fashionable part of, 370. Shop signs, 375. By night; police; lighting, 376. Coffee-houses, 381, 384. Sanitary improvement, 425, 439. Fails to support Monmouth, ii. 169. Roman Catholic establishments in (1686), 354. Agitation against them, 355. The Corporation; dismissal of officers,

LONG

- iii. 70. Meeting of the metropolitan clergy, 82. They refuse to read the Declaration of Indulgences, 83. Illumination for the acquittal of the bishops, 123. Restoration of the Charter, 205. Disturbances in, 233. Agitation against the Papists, 271. Transactions after the flight of James II., 295. Riots, 299. The "Irish night," 305. Raises a loan for William, 339. Returns Whig representatives to the Convention, 349. Illuminated for the Proclamation of William and Mary, iv. 1. Election of 1690, v. 165. Alarm on the news of the defeat off Beachy Head, 241. Offers assistance to the Queen, 244. Effect of the news of the battle of the Boyne, 278. The Jacobite press, 290. Excitement in, on the loss of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 39. Jacobite agitation, 47. Various reports during the siege of Namur, 221. Wagers on the event of the war, 222. Election (1695), 244. Rejoicings for the Peace of Ryswick, 441. Attempted Proclamation of James III. in, viii. 290. Election of the Whig candidates, (1701), 295
- London Bridge, Old, i. 364
- Londonderry, history and description of, iv. 147, 148. Its gates closed against Lord Antrim, 149. Protestants take refuge there, 169. Defences of, 195. Succours arrive from England, 196. Attempted betrayal by the governor; defence taken up by the inhabitants, 197. Character of the inhabitants, 199—201. Measures for the defence, 202. Commencement of the siege, 204. Assault repulsed, 204. The blockade, 207. Distress in the town, 236. Negotiations with Richard Hamilton, 241. Extreme famine, 242. Relieved, and the siege raised, 246. Rejoicings, 247. Relics of the siege, and celebrations in memory thereof, 249
- Londoners; their attachment to London, i. 367
- Long, Thomas; his pamphlet, "Vox Cleri," v. 121, note

LONGLEAT

- Longleat Hall, ii. 153. Retirement of Bishop Ken at, vi. 42
- Lonsdale, Earl of (Sir John Lowther), ii. 284; iv. 21. Made first Lord of the Treasury, v. 169. His speeches on the Revenue, 188. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Abuse of, by the Whigs, 355. Parliamentary attack upon, vi. 125. Appointed Lord of the Admiralty, 190. Speaks in defence of Lord Nottingham, 314. Resists the Triennial Bill, 356. Appointed Lord Privy Seal, viii. 181. Joins in the resistance of the Peers to the Resumption Bill, 268
- Loo, William III.'s mansion at, ii. 440. Negotiations at, between William III. and the Count of Tallard on the Spanish Succession, viii. 128. The treaty signed, 138
- Lords Lieutenant, duties expected from, by James II., iii. 52. Many of them dismissed, 53
- Lorges, Duke of, sacks Heidelberg, vii. 52
- Lorraine, Duke of; his death, v. 345
- "Lottery loan," vii. 114
- Louvois, French Minister of War, iii. 192. Advises the devastation of the Palatinate, iv. 127. His jealousy of Lauzun, 171, v. 215. His advice to James II., 188. Provides means for the siege of Mons, vi. 14. His death, 224. His talents as War Minister; adverse to the plan of invading England, 227. His plot for the assassination of William, 293
- Lovelace, John, Lord, iii. 237. Rises for William, 238. Made prisoner, 238. Liberated by the people of Gloucester; marches to Oxford, 274. His threat to the Lords, 387
- Low Church party, iv. 75—77
- Lowick, Edward; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 285. Executed, 313
- Lowndes, William; his mistaken views of the currency, vii. 262. Locke's refutation of, 263
- Lowther, Sir John. See Lonsdale, Earl of

LUXEMBURG

- Lucas, Charles, character of his Irish patriotism, vi. 119
- Lucas, Lord, appointed Lieutenant of the Tower, iii. 296
- Ludlow, Edmund, refuses to take part in the Whig plots, ii. 110. His Swiss retirement, v. 134. Returns to London, 136. Proclamation for his apprehension, 136. His flight; his tomb at Vevay, 137
- Lumley, Richard, Lord, ii. 172. Pursues Monmouth, 195. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, iii. 146. Signs the invitation to the Prince of Orange, 147. Seizes Newcastle for William, 273
- Lundy, Robert, appointed Governor of Londonderry by Mountjoy, iv. 152. Professes his adherence to the Government of William and Mary, 168. Repulsed by Hamilton at Strabane, 193. His treachery, 195, 197. His flight, 198. Sent to the Tower, 234
- Lunt, turns informer against Lancashire Jacobites, vii. 147. His evidence at Manchester, 149
- Luttrell, Colonel Henry, iv. 211. His intrigues at Limerick, vi. 77. Deputed to St. Germain's, 78. Opens a correspondence with the English, 100. Deserts James; assassinated, 112
- Luttrell, Colonel Simon, iv. 211. Ejects the Fellows of Trinity College, Dublin, 230. Governor of Dublin for James, v. 249. A member of the deputation from Limerick to St. Germain's, vi. 78. Remains faithful to James, 112
- Luttrell, Narcissus; his diary, iv. 2, note
- Luxemburg, seized by Lewis XIV., i. 287
- Luxemburg, Francis Henry, Duke of, gains the battle of Fleurus, v. 241. Commands at the siege of Mons, vi. 15. His campaign against William III. in Flanders, 67. Covers the siege of Namur, 279. His personal peculiarities, 284. Receives information of the Allies' plans, 285. Surprised by William at Steinkirk, 287. Retrieves the day, 289. Advises Lewis

LYME REGIS

- XIV. to give battle, vii. 24. Threatens Liege, 26. Gains the battle of Landen, 30. His inactivity after the battle, 34. His campaign of 1694, 142. His death, 166
 Lyme Regis, Monmouth lands at, i. 151

- MACARTHY. See Mountcashel, Viscount
 Macclesfield, Charles Gerard, Earl of, iii. 196. Opposes the Abjuration Bill, v. 205
 Macdonald, Mac Ian, of Glencoe, vi. 197. His quarrel with the Earl of Breadalbane, 199. Takes the oaths to the Government after the appointed day, 201. The fact of his having taken the oaths suppressed, 210. Slain at Glencoe, 217
 Macdonald of Glengarry, iv. 344. His quarrel with Sir Ewan Cameron, 341. At the battle of Killiecrankie, 374. His quarrel with a Lowland gentleman, v. 319. At the conference at Glenorchy, vi. 196. Takes the oaths to William III.'s Government, 200. Examined by the Glencoe Commissioners, vii. 303
 Macdonald, Colin of Keppoch, iv. 338. Threatens Inverness, 339. Joins Dundee, 344. Examined by the Glencoe Commissioners, vii. 203
 Macdonald of Sleat, iv. 345. Retires from the Highland army, 373
 Macdonalds, their ancient ascendancy in the Highlands, iv. 328. Their claim to be Lords of the Isles, 336. Their feud with the citizens of Inverness, 338
 Mackay, General Andrew, iii. 223. His skirmish with the Irish troops at Wincanton, 253. Sent by William III. to Scotland, iv. 295. His campaign in the Highlands, 347. His plan for a fortress at Inverlochry, 348. Suspends operations, 357. Marches northwards, 369. Arrives at Killiecrankie, 372. Defeated by Dundee, 376. His retreat, 378—381. Re-organises his force, 386. Defeats the Highlanders

MANCHESTER

- at St. Johnston's, 387. Thwarted by the Scotch administration, 389. Supported by William, 389. Builds Fort William, v. 320. Serves under Gakell in Ireland, vi. 82. Forces the passage of the Shannon at Athlone, 89. Turns the Irish flank at Aghrim, 95. At the battle of Steinkirk, 289. His fall, 290
 Mackenzie, Sir George, Lord Advocate, ii. 378. Dismissed, 379. Hated by the Covenanters, iv. 288. His speech in the Scotch Convention against the deposition of James II., 296
 Mackintosh, Sir James, his collection of Newsletters and other documents, i. 406, and note; ii. 14, note. His opinion on the Roman Catholic question, ii. 497
 Mackintoshes, the, iv. 337
 MacLachlan, Margaret, murder of, ii. 73
 Macleans, the, iv. 331, 332
 Macnaghtens, the, iv. 330, 331
 Madrid, Bread riots in, viii. 187
 Magdalene College, Cambridge, MSS. at, i. 317, note. See Pepysian Library
 Magdalene College, Oxford, iii. 17. Its loyalty, 18, 19. Its wealth; vacancy of the Presidency, 20. The Fellows cited before the High Commission, 23. Interview of the Fellows with James II., 28. Penn's negotiations with, 30, and note; 33, and note. Special commissioners sent to, 33. Bishop Parker installed President, 35. The Fellows ejected, 37. Turned into a Popish seminary, 38. Concessions of James in regard to, 205. Announced restoration of the Fellows, 208
 Maine, Duke of, a natural son of Lewis XIV., vii. 11. His cowardice, 216
 Maintenon, Madame de, saves Tréves from destruction, iv. 129. Uses her influence with Lewis XIV. to recognise James III., viii. 282
 Maloney, an Irish bishop, ii. 413, note
 Manchester, Charles Montague, Earl of, joins the rising for the Prince of Orange in the North, iii. 252. Sent ambassador to Paris, viii. 182. Sends

MANCHESTER

- news to William III. of the proclamation of James III., 288. Recalled from Paris, 289
- Manchester, i. 353. Special commission at, in 1694, vii. 148, 149. Acquittal of the prisoners, 150
- Manheim, destroyed by the French, iv. 128
- Manley, John, his speech against the attainder of Fenwick, vii. 375
- Mansuete, Father, ii. 480
- Manufactories, wages in, 433. Ballads regarding, 434, note. Children's labour in, 435
- Marlborough, mound at, i. 301, note. The Duke of Somerset's house at, v. 311
- Marlborough, John Churchill, Duke of; his rise and character, ii. 35. Ambassador extraordinary to France, 36. His operations against Monmouth, 173, 174. At the battle of Sedgemoor, 189. His pity for the convicted rebels, 228. Sits on the trial of Lord Delamere, 293. His communications with Dykvelt; his motives for deserting James II., 515. His letters to William III., 521.; iii. 180. Conspires against James, 239. Attends James, 244. His desertion, 255. Commands the English brigade under Waldeck; repulses the French at Walcourt, v. 62. Complaints of his avarice, 63. His relations with the Princess Anne, 191. Supports the Abjuration Bill, 205. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Advises the sending reinforcements to Ireland, 293. His expedition to Ireland, 312. His dispute with the Duke of Wurttemberg; takes Cork, 314. Takes Kinsale, 315. His reception by William on his return, 316. Hated by the Jacobites; his ties to William, vi. 60. Seeks an interview with Colonel Sackville; his pretended repentance for his desertion of James II., 61. His treasonable betrayal of secrets, 62. His promises to James, 63. Receives a written pardon from James, 64. Accompanies William to the

MARY

- Continent, 65. His correspondence with James, 66. His plot for the restoration of James, 163—167. Calculates on the army's jealousy of foreigners, 164. Distrusted and betrayed by the Jacobites, 169. Disgraced, 170. Various reports of the cause of his disgrace, 171. His signature forged by Robert Young, 255. Sent to the Tower, 258. Released; public feeling in favour of, 262. Robbed by highwaymen, 305. Excites discontent against the Dutch, 317. His opposition to Government, 354. His communications with Middleton, vii. 12. Supports the Bill for regulating State trials, 101. Betrays the intended expedition to Brest, 134. His motives, 138. Offers his services to William, and is rejected, 139. Change in his views caused by the death of Mary, 191. Promotes the reconciliation of the Princess Anne with William, 192. Implicated in Fenwick's confession, 351. His demeanour, 355. His speech in the House of Lords, 390. William III.'s reconciliation with, viii. 117, 118. His motives for fidelity, 119. His support of the Court, 170. Uses his influence in favour of Burnet when attacked in the House of Commons, 250. His share in passing the Resumption Bill, 275
- Marlborough, Sarah, Lady, ii. 518. Her influence over her husband, 519. Her friendship with the Princess Anne, 520. Her influence over the Princess, v. 191. Her wilfulness, 192. Her love of gain, 193. Forms a Princess's party, 195. Attends the Princess Anne to Kensington, vi. 173
- Marsiglia, battle of, vii. 52
- Marston Moor, battle of, i. 122
- Mary of Modena, Queen; her rapacity, ii. 233. Obtains an assignment of rebel prisoners, 234. Rapacity of her maids of honour, 235. Her jealousy of Catharine Sedley, 326. Her dislike of Rochester, 329. Suspected to have been bribed by Tyrconnel, 414. Her pregnancy, iii. 45. Birth of her son, 98. Her flight; her reception by Lewis XIV., 290, 344. Her letters to her correspondents in London betrayed to William III., v. 237. Her letter to Montgomery, 331. Gives birth to a daughter, vi. 232. Question respecting her jointure, vii. 431, 432, note. The payment of her jointure made conditional on the removal of James II. from St. Germain, viii. 90. Her interview with Madame de Maintenon, 282.

MARY

Mary, Princess, (afterwards Queen); educated a Protestant, i. 219. Marries William of Orange, 236. Specimen of her careless use of the English language, 409, note. Her relations with her husband, 431. Which are cleared up by Burnet, 437. Her attachment to her husband, 438. Her disapproval of the Declaration of Indulgence, 495. Subscribes for the ejected Fellows of Magdalene College, iii. 38. Concurs in her husband's enterprise, 141. Her wrongs at the hands of her father, 141. Her husband's ascendancy over her, 362. Detained in Holland, 384. Her letter to Danby, 389. Declared Queen; arrives in England, 401. Her demeanour and its motives, 402. Proclaimed Queen, iv. 1. Her popularity and amiable qualities, 53. Sets the fashion of taste in china, 58. Her coronation, 122. Proclaimed in Scotland, 298. Accepts the crown of Scotland, 303. Orders the arrest of suspected persons, v. 237. Her anxiety during the Irish campaign, 279. Receives tidings of William's wound, and subsequently of his victory at the Boyne, 279. Her solicitude for her father's safety; reviews the volunteer cavalry at Hounslow, 280, 286. Her interview with the Princess Anne on Marlborough's treason, vi. 170. Demands the dismissal of Lady Marlborough, 173. Incurs blame for her treatment of her sister, 175, 176. Her conduct to suspected officers of the navy, 242. Receives a loyal address from them, 243. Her measures for the relief of the wounded in the battle of La Hogue, 251. Her reply to the merchants' address on the loss of the Smyrna fleet, vii. 39. Attacked by the small-pox, 156. Her death, 158. General sorrow, and exultation of the extreme Jacobites, 159, 160. Her funeral, 161. Greenwich Hospital established in honour of her, 162. Effect of her death in Holland; in France, 164. 165. A lock of her hair found on William III. after his death, viii. 303.

MELFORT

Marylebone, i. 363

Massachusetts, charter of, question regarding, i. 283

Massey, John, a Roman Catholic, made Dean of Christchurch, Oxford, ii. 343

Massillon, his character of William III., ii. 444, note

Matthieson, John; his "Dying Testimony," v. 340, note

Maumont, Lieut. General, iv. 172, 194. Directs the siege of Londonderry; killed, 204, 205

Maurice, Prince, of Orange, i. 225

Maxwell, Thomas, vi. 76—78. Defends the ford of the Shannon at Athlone 85. Taken prisoner, 89

Maynard, Sir John; his great age, and eminence as a lawyer, ii. 277. Waits on William Prince of Orange at St. James's, iii. 328. Appointed Commissioner of the Great Seal, iv. 23. His speech on the conversion of the Convention into a Parliament, 31

Mayor, Lord, of London; his state, i. 368

Mazarin, Duchess of, ii. 3

Medicine, science of, its progress in England in the 17th century, i. 425

Megrigny, French engineer officer in Namur, vii. 215

Melfort, John Drummond, Lord, ii. 369. His apostasy to Popery, 369. His unpopularity, iii. 388. Attends James II. to Ireland, iv. 173. His unpopularity, 189, 290. Advises James to go to Ulster, 190. His indignation at

MELGAR

- the conduct of Rosen, 240. His letters to Dundee and Balcarras, 340. Dismissed by James II., v. 44. His letter to Mary of Modena, 278. Made a Knight of the Garter at St. Germain, vi. 233. The author of James's Declaration, 234. His advice respecting the second Declaration, vii. 14
- Melgar, Count of, a Spanish minister, viii. 102
- Melville, George, Lord, agent of William III. in Scotland, iv. 277. Appointed Scotch Secretary of State, 309. Appointed Lord High Commissioner for Scotland, v. 321. Timidity of his administration, vi. 192. Superseded, 193
- Mentz, recovered from the French by the Duke of Lorraine, v. 62
- Meres, Sir Thomas, ii. 87
- Mew, Peter, Bishop of Winchester, ii. 181. Lends his horses for the artillery at Sedgemoor, 190. Prevented by illness from attending the meeting of bishops, iii. 84. Visitor of Magdalene College, 205. Prepares to restore the Fellows of Magdalene; summoned to London, 208. Appointed a member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 99. Officiates at the consecration of Tillotson, vi. 37
- Middlesex, Presbyterianism in, i. 164
- Middleton, Charles, Earl of, Secretary of State; Manager of the House of Commons for James II., ii. 87, 272. His moderate counsel to James, 297. His official denial of a secret league with Lewis XIV., iii. 190. Demands the seals from Sunderland, 212. Receives William's messengers from Windsor, 325. His character, vii. 10. Invited by James to St. Germain, 11. His account of Versailles, 20. At James II.'s death-bed, viii. 281. Created Earl of Monmouth by James III., 288
- Mildmay, Colonel, iv. 41
- Militia, system of, i. 302, 304. Dryden's satire on, 303, note. Resolution for increasing its efficiency, ii. 276, 281

MONMOUTH

- Millevoix, a French spy, vi. 285. Detected, and employed to deceive Luxemburg, 286
- Millington, Sir Thomas, vii. 156
- Milton, Christopher (brother of the poet), raised to the bench by James II., ii. 337
- Milton, John; his remonstrance against the censorship of the press, i. 258. His political works burned at Oxford, 280. His Paradise Lost, 416. His Areopagitica, vi. 366
- Mings, Sir Christopher, i. 315
- Ministry, government by, vii. 59. The first steps thereto 61, 131. Gradual establishment of, 268; viii. 121. Levelling tendency of the tenure of office, 162
- Mitchelburne, Colonel John, at Londonderry, iv. 237. At the battle of the Boyne, v. 258
- Mogul Empire, vi. 134. Its relations with the East India Company, 143, 149
- "Mohawks," i. 375
- Mohun, Lord; his part in the murder of Mountford, vi. 320, 321. His trial before the Peers, and acquittal, 322. A volunteer in the expedition to Brest vii. 136
- Molyneux, William, character of his Irish patriotism, vi. 119. His efforts to promote Irish manufactures, viii. 54. Denies the right of the English Parliament to legislate for Ireland, 54. His death, 59
- Monarchies, mediæval, general character of, i. 29. Limited by the facility of resistance, 35. Become absolute, 43
- Monasteries, benefits of, i. 8. Effects of their abolition, 338
- Monk, George. See Albemarle
- Monmouth, Charles Mordaunt, Earl of (afterwards Earl of Peterborough); his maiden speech in the House of Peers, ii. 287, and note. Advises William of Orange to invade England, 450. At the Hague, iii. 196. Advances to Exeter, 226. Made First Commissioner of the Treasury, iv. 21, 65. Raised to the Earldom, 125.

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 231. His treatment by the Duke of Orange, 447. His death, 448. By the Duke of Orange, 448. 10. His execution, 448. His death, 448. vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exultation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 203. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520 ; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of ; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam ; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender ; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 317.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exultation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 203. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 13.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 203. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONTMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainder quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 203. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainder quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONTMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader, 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germans, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 367. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONTMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made 'Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry; his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exculpation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainder quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

MONMOUTH

Attacks Halifax in the Lords, v. 33. Retires from office, 168. One of the Council of Nine, 229. Sent down to the fleet, 238. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. His secret advice to Fenwick, vii. 389. His anger at its rejection, 391. His intrigue discovered, 397. His speech, 398. Sent to the Tower, 399.

Monmouth, James, Duke of, married to Anne Scott, heiress to the Dukedom of Buccleuch, i. 259. His titles and popularity, 260. Rumoured legitimacy of his birth, 260. Supported by the Protestant party, 261. His disgrace, 279. His house in Soho Square, 370. His character, ii. 106. His residence at the Hague, 107. Retires to Brussels, 112. Consents to the attempt on England, 113. His preparations at Amsterdam, 122. Detained in the Texel, 148. Sails; arrives at Lyme, 150. His declaration, 152. His popularity in the west, 153. Enters Taunton, 158. His reception, 164. Proclaimed King, 166. His reception at Bridgewater, 170. His army, 171. Marches to Glastonbury, 174. Threatens Bristol, 175. Marches towards Wiltshire, 178. His desperate condition, 179. His scheme of escape; marches to Wells, 180. At Bridgewater, 181. Surveys the royal army, 182. Resolves on a night attack, 184. His conduct in the battle of Sedgemoor, 188. His flight, 189—194. And capture, 196. His entreaties for pardon, 198. Taken to London, 199. His interview with James II., 200. His interviews with his wife and others, 202—204. His execution, 204—206. Popular devotion to, 208. Believed to be living, 209. Severities to his adherents, 226—231. His treatment by the Prince of Orange, 447. His portrait burned by the University of Cambridge, iii. 10. Expectation of his reappearance, 106.

Monopolies, Royal prerogative of, vi.

MONTAGUE

132. Settlement of the question of, vii. 100.

Mons, besieged by Lewis XIV., vi. 15.

Capitulates, 16. Exultation of the Jacobites, 34. Apathy of the Spanish Government in its defence, 271.

Montague, Charles; his early intimacy with Prior, ii. 460. Enters Parliament, iii. 366. His argument on the Peers' privileges, vi. 160—162. Made Commissioner of the Treasury, 191. Proposes to raise money by loan, 336. Defends Burnet in Parliament, 371. His family and education; destined for the Church, vii. 75. His poetry his parliamentary success, 76, 78. His patronage of literature, 79. His speech on the naval disasters, 93. Takes up Paterson's plan for a national bank, 123. Made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 129. Elected for Westminster, 245. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, 260, 266. His resolutions for a recoinage, 270. Proposes to meet the expense by a window-tax, 271. His expedient of Exchequer bills, 330. His influence with the Bank of England, 334. Success of his measures, 365. His speeches on the attainder of Fenwick, 377, 381. Made First Lord of the Treasury, 412. Parliamentary attack upon, viii. 36, 38. Triumphant exultation, 39. His project of a General Company in opposition to the Old East India Company, 61. His success, and eminent position, 66. Elected for Westminster, 125. His loss of popularity, 152, 153. His alleged pride and corruption, 154. Absurd stories of his luxurious habits, 155. Cause of the libels published against him, 156. His conduct in regard to the Auditorship of the Exchequer, 157, 158. His conduct compared with that of Pitt under similar circumstances, 159. Parliamentary mortifications, 159, 160. Resigns the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, 237.

Montague, Chief Baron, dismissed by James II., ii. 337.

MONTAGUE

- Montague, Ralph ; his share in the French intrigues against Danby, i. 241
- Montague House, i. 371
- Montchevreuil, commands the French left wing at the battle of Landen, vii. 28. Killed, 33
- Montgomery, Sir James, iv. 297, 303. Aspires to the Secretaryship of State for Scotland, 308. Organises the "Club" in Edinburgh, 310. Strength and measures of his faction, 362. Intrigues with the Jacobites, v. 316, 317. His loss of influence, 323. Letters of James II. to, 331. Quarrels with his Jacobite allies, 332. Betrays his associates, 333. His interview with Shrewsbury, vii. 130. His death, 147
- Montmorency, House of, vi. 284
- Montrose, James Graham Marquess of, his victories, why unprofitable, iv. 351
- Mordaunt, Charles, Viscount. See Monmouth, Earl of
- More, Henry, i. 344
- Morel, warns Burnet of the plan for assassinating William, vi. 295
- Morison, James, of Londonderry, iv. 150
- "Morley, Mrs.," name assumed by the Princess Anne, ii. 520; v. 191
- Mortimer, Roger, precedent of his attainer quoted, vii. 385
- Morton, Judge, insists on the execution of Claude Duval, i. 398
- Moscow, state of, in the 17th century, viii. 72
- Mountcashel, Viscount (General Macarthy), iv. 167. Marches on Enniskillen, 250. Defeated at Newton Butler, 252, 253. Breaks his parole ; enters into the service of Lewis XIV., v. 214
- Mountford, William, the actor, vi. 309. Murdered, 319
- Mountjoy, William Stewart, Viscount, sent by Tyrconnel into Ulster, iv. 152. At Londonderry and Enniskillen, 153. His mission to St. Germain, 159. Sent to the Bastille, 170. Included in

NATIONAL DEBT

- James II.'s Act of Attainder, 225. Killed at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 290
- Muggleton, Lodowick, i. 170
- Mulgrave, Earl of. See Normanby, Marquess of
- Munro, Captain of Cameronians, iv. 391
- "Muns," i. 375
- Murray, Alexander Stuart, Earl of; his apostasy to Popery, ii. 370. Made Lord High Commissioner, 375
- Murray, Captain Adam; his share in the defence of Londonderry, iv. 198. His conference with Lord Strabane, 204. Leads a sally, 205
- Murray, Lord, son of the Marquess of Athol, takes up arms for William III., iv. 357. Besieges Blair Castle, 369. Deserted by his followers, 371. Raises the siege, 372
- Musgrave, Sir Christopher, demurs to the resolution declaring James II. to have forfeited the crown, iii. 370, 381. Defends Sharp, Dean of Norwich, vii. 85. A Tory leader. 85. Mover of the resolution for the exclusion of Lord Somers from office, viii. 277. His rejection for Westmoreland in 1701, 295
- Mutiny Bill, the first, iv. 48
- NAGLE, Sir Richard, Irish Attorney General, iv. 135, 210. Appointed James's Secretary of State for Ireland, v. 44. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II., vi. 101
- Namur, town and castle of, vi. 278. Besieged by the French, 279. Surrender; patriotism of the citizens, 280, 281. Besieged by William III., vii. 215, 217, 218. The town taken, 219. Surrender of the castle, 225. Effect of the success, 228, 229
- Nantes, Edict of, revoked, ii. 268
- Narborough, Sir John, i. 316
- Naseby, battle of, i. 123
- Nassau, House of, i. 225
- National debt, origin of, vi. 329—336. Its growth, 337. Errors in regard to 338—341

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Noailles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Prosecution of, by James II., ii. 251-253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 463
- The penal statutes suspended in their favour, 470. Their feelings with regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance of power between the Court and the Church, 475. Courtied by both parties, 475, 476. Some of them sit with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority with the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct, 81. Their deputation to the bishops in the Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their dislike of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 99, 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70-72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78-90. General character of, 90-93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 292. Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Sees of the Non-juring Bishops, filled, 37. Succession of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339-343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rises for William Prince of Orange, 274. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Monmouth's intrigue with Sir John Fenwick, vii. 389-397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess of (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 313. His character, ii. 11. His share in

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquisate, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Noailles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Prosecution of, by James II., ii. 251
253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 4
- The penal statutes suspended in its favour, 470. Their feelings in regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance power between the Court and Church, 475. Courtied by both parties, 475, 476. Some of them with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority of the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct, Their deputation to the bishops in Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their disapproval of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70—72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78—90. General character of, 90—93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 25. Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Seats of the Nonjuring Bishops, filled, 37. Success of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339—343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rival for William Prince of Orange, 27. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Moimouth's intrigue with Sir John Fenwick, vii. 389—397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 31. His character, ii. 11. His share

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquise, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Nosilles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Prosecution of, by James II., ii. 251, 253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 4
- The penal statutes suspended in his favour, 470. Their feelings in regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance power between the Court and Church, 475. Courtied by both, 475, 476. Some of them with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority of the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct. Their deputation to the bishops in Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their disapproval of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70—72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78—90. General character of, 90—93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 25. Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Sees of the Nonjuring Bishops, filled, 37. Success of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339—343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rises for William Prince of Orange, 27. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Portsmouth's intrigue with Sir John Fenwick, vii. 389—397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 31. His character, ii. 11. His share in

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquisate, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Noailles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Persecution of, by James II., ii. 251—253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 483. The penal statutes suspended in their favour, 470. Their feelings with regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance of power between the Court and the Church, 475. Courtied by both parties, 475, 476. Some of them sit with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority with the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct, 81. Their deputation to the bishops in the Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their dislike of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 99, 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70—72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78—90. General character of, 90—93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 292. Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Sees of the Nonjuring Bishops, filled, 37. Succession of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339—343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rises for William Prince of Orange, 274. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Monmouth's intrigue with Sir John Fenwick, vii. 389—397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess of (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 313. His character, ii. 11. His share in

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquisate, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Noailles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Prosecution of, by James II., ii. 251
253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 41
- The penal statutes suspended in its favour, 470. Their feelings in regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance of power between the Court and Church, 475. Courtied by both parties, 475, 476. Some of them in with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority in the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct, 97. Their deputation to the bishops in Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their disapproval of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70—72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78—90. General character of, 90—93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 28. Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Sees of the Nonjuring Bishops, filled, 37. Success of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339—343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rival for William Prince of Orange, 27. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Portsmouth's intrigue with Sir John Feilding, vii. 389—397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 31. His character, ii. 11. His share

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquise, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

NEALE

- Neale, makes arrangements for the lottery loan, vii. 114
- Neerwinden, village of, part of William's position at Landen, vii. 28. Severe fighting at, 30
- Nelthorpe, a rebel fugitive, ii. 218
- Neville, Judge, dismissed by James II., ii. 313
- Nevison, William, a Yorkshire highwayman, i. 397
- Newcastle, John Holles, Duke of, entertains William at Welbeck, vii. 241
- Newcastle-on-Tyne, dismissal of aldermen in, iii. 70
- Newmarket, William III.'s visit to, vii. 238. Tallard accompanies William to the Spring Meeting, viii. 109. Distinguished attendance; various amusements, 111. Important discussions at, 114, 115
- Newport, Viscount, iii. 60
- Newsletters, i. 405
- Newspapers, i. 403. First appearance of, vii. 231. Their politics favourable to the Revolution, 233
- Newton Abbot, William's Declaration read at, iii. 226
- Newton Butler, battle of, iv. 252, 253. Compared with Killiecrankie, 383
- Newton, Isaac, i. 427. Attends as a deputy from Cambridge before the High Commission, iii. 13. Member for Cambridge University in the Convention, 366. Votes for Sir R. Sawyer for Cambridge University, in 1690, v. 165. Takes part in the discussions on the currency, vii. 260. Appointed Governor of the Mint, 336. His energy in the re-coinage, 337, and note. Elected for Cambridge University in 1701, viii. 296
- Nickers, i. 375
- Nimeguen, treaty of, i. 238. Its slow progress, vii. 426
- Nosilles, Duke of; his successes in Catalonia, vii. 31, 140
- Noncompounders, vii. 6. Dissatisfied with James's second Declaration, 17
- Nonconformists, expelled from their benefices, i. 183. Persecuted, 184. Laws

NORMANBY

- against, rigorously enforced, 275. Prosecution of, by James II., ii. 251
253. James II.'s design for a coalition with the Irish Nonconformists, 40
- The penal statutes suspended in his favour, 470. Their feelings regard to the Declaration of Indulgence, 472. Hold the balance power between the Court and Church, 475. Courtied by both parties, 475, 476. Some of them with the Court, 481. Their address to the King, 483. The majority of the Church, 485. Their dissatisfaction with their ministers of the Court party, 491, 492. Their distrust of James II.'s policy, iii. 70. (Of London), their patriotic conduct, their deputation to the bishops in Tower, 97. Their address to William Prince of Orange, 328. Their disapproval of the Comprehension Bill, iv. 100
- Nonjurors; their arguments against taking the oaths, v. 70—72. Their principles untenable, 73. Their numbers; prelates and eminent divines among, 78—90. General character of, 90—93. Outcry against, during the alarm of French invasion, 26
- Attempt of the Government to conciliate them, vi. 36. Sees of the Nonjuring Bishops, filled, 37. Success of, provided for by Sancroft; they sink into contempt, 43, 44
- Nonjurors, Presbyterian; their political tenets, v. 339—343
- Norfolk, Dukes of; their palace at Norwich, i. 351
- Norfolk, Henry, Duke of, iii. 62. Rises for William Prince of Orange, 27
- Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1
- Norfolk, Duchess of; her share in Portsmouth's intrigue with Sir John Feikwick, vii. 389—397
- Norman Kings of England, i. 3, 14
- Normanby, John Sheffield, Marquess (Earl of Mulgrave); his early promotion in the navy and army, i. 31
- His character, ii. 11. His share

NORMANDY

- the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission to the University of Cambridge, 12. Waits on the Prince of Orange at St James's, iii. 340. Takes the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His speech on the assessment for the Land Tax, vi. 327. On the Place Bill, 353. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. Opposes the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Raised to the Marquisate, 132. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Normandy, separation of, from England, i. 15
- Normans; their great qualities, i. 11. Their conquests, 12. In England, 13. Their amalgamation with the Saxons, 16
- North Road, the Great, i. 387
- North, Roger, i. 284. His "Examen," 367, note. His statement respecting Dangerfield, ii. 64, note
- North, Sir Dudley, his house in Basinghall Street, i. 366. His career and character, ii. 94, 95. Questioned for packing juries, v. 140. His dislike of banking, vii. 117. His tract on the Currency, 261
- Northampton, Spencer Compton, Earl of, slain at the battle of Hopton Heath, ii. 32
- Northampton, George Compton, Earl of, (grandson of the above), iii. 60
- Northamptonshire, contested election for (1685), ii. 53
- "Northern Memoirs," iv. 316, note
- Northumberland, wild state of (time of Charles II.), i. 196. Election for (1685), ii. 55
- Northumberland Household Book, i. 326
- Northumberland, George Fitzroy, Duke of, Lord of the Bedchamber to James II., iii. 293, 294
- Norwich, in the time of Charles II., i. 350
- Nottingham, i. 352
- Nottingham, Heneage Finch, Earl of; his high reputation, ii. 507
- Nottingham, Daniel Finch, Earl of, son

OATES

- of the above; his conferences with Dykvelt, ii. 507. His character and appearance, 508. His hesitation in joining the Revolution, iii. 145. Questioned by James II., 216. His speech in favour of a Regency, 374. His speech on the settlement of the Government, 395. Appointed Secretary of State under William and Mary, iv. 19. His dissensions with the Earl of Shrewsbury, 66. His ecclesiastical views, 82. Brings forward the Toleration Bill, 84. Moves the Comprehension Bill, 93. Resists the Bill confirming the Acts of the Parliament of 1689, v. 199. One of the Council of Nine, 229. His interview with Crone in Newgate, 235. Imparts to Queen Mary the news of the victory of the Boyne, 279. Attends William III. at the Hague, vi. 9. Hated by the extreme Whigs, 192. His quarrel with Admiral Russell, 300. Supported by the Peers, 314. William's confidence in his honesty, 385. Retires from office, vii. 95. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, 101. His scruples in regard to the Association, 314. Resists Fenwick's attainer, 393
- Nugent, Thomas, Irish Chief Justice of the King's Bench, iii. 167; iv. 135, 163
- OATES, TITUS, i. 242. His extravagant stories and evidence, 246, 247. His evidence against Lord Stafford, 270. Proceedings against him; attempts to procure his escape, ii. 57. His appearance; his trial, conviction, and sentence, 58, 59. His punishment, 60. His impostures, why successful, 291. Released from Newgate, v. 7. Brings a writ of error before the Lords, 8. His sentence confirmed, 10. Bill for annulling his sentence passes the Commons, 12. Conference of the Houses on his case, 13, 14. Receives a pardon and a pension, 16. His re-appearance, 139. His discontent; joins the

O'BRIEN

- Baptists, vi. 179. Expelled by them, 180. His connection with Fuller, 184.
- O'Brien, an adventurer, employed by Sir John Fenwick, vii. 370
- "Observer," the, i. 406
- O'Donnel, Baldearg; his exile in Spain; escapes; arrives in Ireland, v. 306. Enters Limerick, 307. Makes terms with General Ginkell, vi. 98
- Ogilby; his Itinerarium Angliæ, i. 322, note
- Oglethorpe, Colonel, attacks the rebels at Keynsham, ii. 177. At the battle of Sedgemoor, 189, note
- Oldham, i. 340, note
- Oldmixon, ii. 215, note
- Omagh, destroyed by the inhabitants, iv. 169. James II. at, 192
- O'Neil, Sir Neil, killed at the battle of the Boyne, v. 262
- O'Neills, family of, ii. 387
- Orange, dismantled by Lewis XIV., ii. 443
- Orford, Earl of (Edward Russell), takes part in the consultations with Dykvelt, ii. 513. Negotiates between William Prince of Orange and the leaders of English parties, iii. 140. Obtains the adhesion of Shrewsbury, 142. Signs the invitation to William, 147. Arrives in Holland, 180. One of the Council of Nine, v. 229. Proposes the despatch ordering Torrington to give battle; sent down to the fleet, 238. His character, vi. 56. His letter to William; his dealings with the Jacobites, 57. James II.'s expectations of assistance from, 229. Disgusted by James's Declaration, 239, 240. Joined by the Dutch fleet, 241. Reads the Queen's despatch to his assembled officers, 242. Stands out to sea, 243. Defeats Tourville at La Hogue, 244—248. Puts to sea, and returns, 299. Quarrels with Nottingham, 300. Supported by the Commons, 314. Superseded in the command of the navy, 384. His communications with Middleton, vii. 4. His influence over the Whig party, 71. Made First Lord of the Admi-

ORMOND

- ralty, 95. His secrecy in regard to the plan against Brest, 134. See for the Mediterranean, 135. Arrives in the Mediterranean, 140. Baffled by the Spanish Government; his improved naval administration, 14 Winters at Cadiz, 142. His superiority in the Mediterranean (1693—230. His services and popularity, 24 Elected for Middlesex (1695), 24 Joins the fleet on the discovery of the assassination plot, 297. Puts to sea, 299. Implicated in Fenwick's confession, 352. His demeanour, 352 Demands inquiry into Fenwick's confession, 372. Made Earl of Orford and Viscount Barfleur, 411. His administration of the navy, viii. 1 Parliamentary inquiry into his administration, 178. Compelled to resign the Treasurership of the Admiralty, 180. His dispute with Sir George Rooke, and retirement, 180
- Orkney, Countess of. See Elizabeth Villiers
- Ormond, James Butler, Duke of, i. 11 His income, 320. High public estimation of, ii. 20. Recalled from Ireland, 22. Keeps aloof from Popish observances, 47. His moderate counsel to James II., 297. Supports Catharine Sedley, 325. Chancellor of the University of Oxford, iii. 8. His death, 159
- Ormond, Duke of (grandson of the above); elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford, iii. 159. Displeased James II., 258. Present at the coronation of William and Mary, 122. Made a Knight of the Garter, 125. Meeting of Irish proprietors at his house, 155. At the battle of the Boyne, v. 257. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1. At the battle of Steinkirk, 290. His house broken into, 304. Taken prisoner at Landen, vii. 30. His part in the debate on Fenwick's attainder, 393—396. Grant of Irish lands to, by the House of Commons, viii. 266. Present at the death-bed of William III., 302

OROPESA

- Oropesa, Spanish minister, popular attack upon, viii. 187
- Osborne, Sir Thomas. See Danby, Earl of
- Ossory, Earl of, commands British auxiliaries in Holland, i. 236
- Ostalric, taken by the French, vii. 140
- Ottobuoni, Peter. See Alexander VIII.
- Overall, Bishop; his treatise on the rights of governors, vi. 47, note
- Oxford, meeting of Parliament at (1681), i. 271. Eminent divines at, 344. Flying coach to, 392. Low state of Greek learning at (time of Charles II.), 411. Loyal address from, to James II., ii. 51. Loyalty of the University, 172. Roman Catholics at, under James II., 343. Bishopric of, 343. The University; its splendour, iii. 8. Its loyalty, 9. James II.'s attack upon, 14. James II. at, 28. Agitation in, on the affairs of Magdalene College, 35, 37. The Corporation of, refuses to resign its charter, 73. Election of Chancellor at, 159. Welcomes the insurgents, 274. William III.'s visit to, vii. 242
- Oxford, Aubrey de Vere, Earl of, iii. 53. Dismissed from the Lord Lieutenancy of Essex, 54. At the Council of Lords, 263. Joins William Prince of Orange, 275. At the battle of the Boyne, v. 257
- Oxford, Earls of, iii. 53

PALAMOS, taken by the French, vii. 140

- Palatinate laid waste by the French under Duras, in 1689, iv. 126, 128. Again ravaged by the French under the Duke of Lorges, in 1693, vii. 52
- Palatine Elector, the; his prudent advice to James II., ii. 356
- Papal supremacy, advantages of, in the dark ages, i. 9
- Papillon, Thomas, a Director of the East India Company; an Exclusionist, vi. 140. Retires from the Direction, 141. His accusation against Sir Josiah Child, 144. Chairman of the Com-

PARLIAMENT

- mittee of the House of Commons in the affair of the Redbridge, vii. 99
- Paris, rejoicings in, on the report of William III.'s death at the battle of the Boyne, v. 276
- Parker, Samuel, made Bishop of Oxford, ii. 343; iii. 20. Recommended by James II. for the Presidency of Magdalene College, 23. Installed in the Presidency, 35. His death, 38
- Parkhurst, Bishop, i. 52
- Parkinson, R., on the population of Manchester, i. 354, note
- Parkyns, Sir William, a Jacobite conspirator, vii. 198. His share in the assassination plot, 282. Arms found at his house, 300. His trial and conviction, 308. Refuses to betray his confederates; executed, 311
- Parliament, powers of, i. 30. Strength of Puritans in (under Elizabeth), 62. Abstains from opposition, 64. Takes up the question of monopolies, 65. Eleven years' disuse of, by Charles I., 89. Called, in consequence of the Scotch war, 98. Dissolved, 99. The Long Parliament, 100. Its measures; parties in, 101. Its unanimity at the outset, 102. Its increased demands on the King, 115. Its resources at the commencement of the civil war, 117. Reverses, 119. Submits to military rule, 124. Dissolved, 136. Parliaments under Cromwell, 140, 141. The Long, revived; second expulsion, 148. Its return, 152. And final dissolution, 153. Convention summoned by Monk; its meeting, 155. Dissolved by Charles II., 181
- Parliament of 1661, its zeal for royalty, i. 182. Opposition in, to Charles II., 200. Deceived by the Cabal; prorogued, 223. Dissolved, 245; vi. 346. Its servility, 347
- Parliament of 1679 (the first); its violence against Papists, i. 248. Prorogued, 258. Second Parliament of 1679, 259. Meets; the Exclusion Bill passed by the Commons, 268. The Lords throw out the Bill, 269
- Parliament of 1681; summoned to meet

PARLIAMENT

at Oxford, i. 270. Its meeting and dissolution, 271

Parliament of 1685, ii. 29. Its attachment to the Court, 56. Meets; preliminary consultations, 85. Elects a Speaker, 87. Its proceedings regarding religion, 92-93. Votes supplies, 94. Attaints Monmouth, 159. Its liberal supplies to James II., 160. Adjourned, 162. Re-assembles (Nov. 1685), 271. Opposition organised in, 272. Majorities against Government, 279, 282. Addresses James II. on the Test; reprimanded by him, 283. Prorogued, 331. Dissolved, iii. 3

Parliament of 1689 (See Convention) enters into the question of revenue, iv. 34—36. Passes the Toleration Bill, 92. And the Bill for settling oaths, 103. Petitions William III. to summon Convocation, 117. Addresses the King on the proceedings of Lewis XIV., 132. Disputes in, v. 12, 16. Disputes between the Houses, 19. Recess, 38. Re-assembles, 124. Votes supplies, 125. Passes the Bill of Rights, 126. Inquires into naval abuses, 128. Inquires into the conduct of the Irish war, 129. Violence of the Whig faction, 130—137. Impeachments, 139. Appoints the "Murder Committee," 140. Prorogued, 161. Dissolved, 164.

Parliament of 1690; its meeting, v. 186. Settles the revenue, 187—189. Passes a Bill declaring the Acts of the last Parliament valid, 199. Passes the Act of Grace, 207. Prorogued, 210. Re-assembles, 347. Grants supplies; appoints Commissioners to examine accounts; debates on ways and means, 348. Question of Irish confiscations, 380. Question of proceedings against Lord Torrington, 381. Re-assembles in October, 1691, vi. 123. Grants supplies; debates on official fees and salaries, 124—126. Debates on the settlement of Ireland; question relative to the Treaty of Limerick, 127, 128—

PARLIAMENT

130. Debates on the East India trade, 149. Passes resolutions on the subject, 150. Bill brought in, 151. Defeated by the Company, 152. Petitions William III. to dissolve the Company, 153. Debates on the Bill for regulating Trials for High Treason, 153—157. Discussion on the Law amendment, 158—162. The Bill dropped, 163. Inquires into Falkland's allegations of a plot, 184. Session 1692, 307. Parties in, 308. Question of privilege in the Lords, 309. Debates on the state of the nation, the Grand Committee of Advice, 310. Inquires into naval administration, 313—315. Revival of the Bill regulating Trials for Treason, 316. Resumed debate on the India trade, 322. Votes supplies, 323. Regulates the Land Tax, 325. Dispute between the Houses, 327. Raises money loan, 336. Question of Parliament Reform, 343. Becomes unpopular, 348, 349. Debates on the Place Bill, 353, 354. On the Triennial Bill, 355—358. Secrecy of debates, 359. Burns Burnet's Pastoral Letter, 360. Addresses William III. on the state of Ireland, 380. Debates on naval carriages, 93, 94. On the trade with India, 98. On the regulation of Trials for High Treason, 100. The Triennial Bill, 102—104. The Place Bill, 104. Excitement on William III.'s employment of Veto, 106. Representation to the King; his reply, 107. Reaction to the King's favour, 108. Debates the Bill for the Naturalisation of Foreign Protestants, 109—111. Debates on Supply, 112. Ways and Means, 113. Debates on the Bill of England Bill, 125, 126. Prorogued, 129. Meets in November, 1691. Debates on the Lancastrian prosecutions, 153. Resumed debate on the bills of the last session, 1692. Abolishes the censorship of the press, 167. Inquires into official corruption, 173. Expels Sir John Trevor from the Speakership, 178. Impeachment of the Duke of Leeds, 184—187. Dissolved, 237.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament of 1695 assembles, vii. 267. Debates on the Currency, 270—272. On the Bill for regulating State Trials, 274—276. Proceedings on the grant of Crown Lands in Wales to the Duke of Portland, 277. Proceedings on the assassination plot, 298. "The Association," 299, 314, 315. Debates on the Bill for the Regulation of Elections, 319. On the Bill for a Land Bank, 323—325. Re-assembles 358. Loyal resolutions, 360. Proceedings touching Fenwick's confession, 373. Commons' debates on the Bill for Fenwick's Attainder, 374—386. Lords' debates, 390—396. Debates on the Bill for regulating Elections, 404—406. On the Bill for the Regulation of the Press, 407. Abolishes the privileges of Whitefriars and the Savoy; close of the session, 408, 410. Meets in Dec. 1697, viii. 16. Loyal address of the Commons to the King, 16. Resolution for the reduction of the army, 18. Ineffectual attempt to rescind the resolution, 24. The army reduced to 10,000 men, 24. Liberal provision for the navy; fixed income for the King, 26. Provides securities against conspiracies and disaffected persons, 26. Ways and means, proposed resumption of crown property granted to the King's Dutch servants, 31—34. The motion defeated, 36. Debates on charges of fraud against Montague, 36, 38, 40. Bill of Pains and Penalties against Charles Duncombe, 40. Rejected by the Lords, 48. Dispute between the Houses, 49. Length of the session; commercial questions, 50. Endeavour to prevent smuggling by severe penalties, 52. Addresses to the King for the protection of the English woollen manufactures against Irish competition, 58. Debates on the revocation of the East India Company's Charter, 62. On Montague's proposal of a General Company, 64. Debate in the Lords; prorogation, 65. Steady support of government by the Parliament of 1695, 121.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament of 1698, strength of parties in, viii. 127. Discontent at William III.'s delay in Holland, 142. Choice of a Speaker, 142, 144. Election of Sir Thomas Littleton, 144. Resolution for the reduction of the army to 7000, 147. Failure of the Ministry to rescind the resolution, 152. Variance between the House of Commons and the Ministry, 159—162. Tyrannical conduct of the House, 164. The Bill for disbanding the army passes the Commons, 165. Debate in the Lords, the Bill passed, 165. Resolution carried in the Lords in favour of retaining the Dutch guards, 170. William's message to the Commons, 172. The previous question carried, 173. Address to the King, 174. Discussion on naval administration, 176, 178. Clause for the appointment of Commissioners to take account of property forfeited in Ireland; the Lords demur, 179. Prorogation, 179. Proceedings on the establishment of the Scottish Company for colonizing Darien, 212. Assembles in Nov. 1699, 246. Intemperate address of the Commons to the King, 247. Attack on Somers, 247. On Burnet, 249. Second attack on Somers, 253, 254. Proceedings on the report of the Commissioners on Irish forfeited estates, 260. Remuneration to the Commissioners who signed the report, 261. Sir Richard Levinge sent to the Tower; the Resumption Bill, 262. Extravagant grants to the Duke of Ormond, 266. The Resumption Bill tacked to the Land Tax Bill; indignation in the House of Peers, 267. Amendments carried by them; rejected by the Commons, 269. Violence of the House of Commons, 270. Conferences between the Houses, 272, 273. The Lords give way and pass the Bill, 275. Motion in the Commons for the removal of Lord Somers from office, 277. Its defeat, 278. Prorogation, 279. Dissolution, 294

PARLIAMENT

Parliament of Ireland, summoned by James II., in 1689, iv. 210—213. Passes the Toleration Act, 215. Confiscates the property of Protestants, 216

Parliament (Irish), of 1692; assembles; its composition and limited powers, vi. 377. Rejects the Act of Settlement; appoints Committee of Grievances, 378, 379

Parliament, Scotch, constitution of, i. 96.

Parliament of 1685; its subservience to James II., ii. 69. Enacts the statute against conventicles, 70. Assembles in 1686, 375. Its refractory spirit, 375. Representatives of towns, 376. Adjourned, 380. The Parliament of 1689; factions in, iv. 363. Passes the Act of Incapacitation, 364. Refuses supplies, 365. Adjourned, 381. Re-assembles in 1690, v. 320. Factionousness and venality of the leading statesmen, 321. Government obtains a majority, 322. Votes supplies, 323. Restores the ejected Presbyterian ministers, 325. Settles the church constitution, 325—328. Settles the question of church patronage, 329. Adjourns, 336. Re-assembles in 1693, vi. 388. Its unexpected moderation, 390. Meets in 1695, vii. 199. Proceedings in regard to the Glencoe massacre, 202—204. Votes supply, 209. Meets in the autumn of 1696; passes Acts for the security of Government; Act for the settling of Schools, 415. Passes an Act incorporating a Company to carry out Paterson's scheme, viii. 204. Powers given to the Company, 205

Partition Treaty, the first, viii. 128. Unreasonable outcry against, 129—135. The second Partition Treaty, 186

Pascal Blaise, ii. 314

Pasquines, ii. 530

Paterson, William; his plan of a National Bank, vii. 123. His fruitless projects, viii. 196. His intimacy with Fletcher of Saltoun, 197. Popularity of his schemes in Scotland, 198, 11

PEMBROKE

Proposes the colonization of Dari by Scotland, 201—204. His examination before the House of Commons, 214. His obstinate self-delusion, 215. Sails for America, 216. His disastrous failure, 225

Patrick, Simon, preacher at St. Paul's Covent Garden, i. 344. Takes part in the conference with Roman Catholic divines, ii. 407. His share in resisting the reading of James II.'s Declaration, iii. 82. A member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 96. Employed to re-write the Collects; his style, 102, 103, and note. Made Bishop of Chichester, 113. Translated to Ely, vi. 44

Pauperism, diminution of, i. 437, note

Payne, Neville, a Jacobite agent, v. 31

Flies to Scotland, 334. Seized and examined by torture; his firmness, 335

Pearson, John, Bishop of Chester, 344. His death, ii. 343

Pechell, Dr. John, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, iii. 13. His behaviour of Jeffreys to, 14

Peculiars, Court of, ii. 345

Pelham, Henry, Parliamentary corruption under, v. 176

Pemberton, counsel for the bishops, 111, 114

Pembroke, Thomas Herbert, Earl of, collects the Wiltshire militia to oppose Monmouth, ii. 171. Removed from the Lord Lieutenancy of Wiltshire, iii. 60. Present at the coronation of William and Mary, iv. 122. Placed at the head of the Admiralty, v. 11. One of the Council of Nine, 21. Appointed Lord Privy Seal, vi. 15. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, vii. 190. His part in the debate on Fenwick's attainder, 393, 396. English negotiator at Ryswick, 423. Appointed President of the Council, vi. 181. Joins in the resistance to the Peers to the Resumption Bill, 268

PENDERGRASS

- Pendergrass warns Portland of the assassination plot, vii. 293. His interview with William III., 294. His evidence, 303
- Penn, William, ii. 80. His influence with James II., 81. His high reputation, 82. His character, 83. Conducts the bargain for the ransom of the Taunton young ladies, 235, 236, and note. His presence at the execution of Cornish, 247. At the burning of Elizabeth Gaunt, 249. His services to James II., 483. His proposal of equivalents, 501. At Chester, iii. 26. Negotiates with the Fellows of Magdalene College, 30, 31, and note; Advises a Jacobite invasion of England, v. 218. Examined by the Privy Council, 231. Held to bail, 232. Takes part in a Jacobite conspiracy, 357. Informed against by Preston, vi. 24. Warrant issued against, 24. His flight; his interview with Lord Sidney, 31. Pardoned; his faithlessness, 32
- Penne, George, ii. 236, note
- Pepys, Samuel; his report on the English Navy, i. 310, 317, note. His account of Bristol, 348. His travelling adventures, 388. His administration of the Admiralty, ii. 21; iii. 116. Examined as witness against the bishops, 201
- Pepysian Library, ballads in, i. 299, note; 317, note; ii. 210, note; 358. Maps of London in, i. 365, note. MSS. in, ii. 190, note
- Perth, James Drummond, Earl of, Chancellor of Scotland, ii. 369. Apostatises, 376. Supports the policy of James II., 382; iii. 350. Retires from Edinburgh, 350. His attempted flight, 352. Raised to the Dukedom by James III., vii. 288
- Peter the First, Czar of Muscovy, his visit to England, viii. 69. Surprise excited by his character, 72. His passion for maritime pursuits, 73. Interest felt for him in England; his intercourse with William III., 75. Lodges at Deptford, 75. His inter-

POLWARTH

- views with Burnet; his filthy habits, 76. Visits Portsmouth; his departure, 78
- Peterborough, Henry Mordaunt, Earl of; author of Halstead's "Succinct Genealogies," i. 269, note. Converted to Popery, ii. 453. Appointed Lieutenant of Northamptonshire, iii. 63. His suit against Williams, 78. Impeached, v. 139
- "Petition of Right," i. 88. Violated by Charles I., 89
- Petre, Father, ii. 315. Refused a dispensation by the Pope, 344. Tyrconnel's intrigues with, 414. A privy councillor, iii. 52
- Petty, Sir William, i. 293, note. His Political Arithmetic, 350, note. One of the founders of the Royal Society, 426. His statement of labourers' wages, 430. His settlement at Kenmare, iv. 142
- Philip's Norton, skirmish at, ii. 178
- Pilgrimages, advantages of, i. 7. From England to Rome, 9
- Piracy in the Indian Ocean, viii. 239
- Pitt, William, instance of his disinterested patriotism, viii. 159
- Place Bill, vi. 349, 353, 354. Negatived by William III., vii. 104, 106. Rejected by the Commons, 155
- Placemen; true principles of their admission to Parliament, vi. 350, 352
- Plantagenets; their greatness, i. 14
- Plowden, Francis, iv. 211. One of the Lords Justices appointed by James II. for Ireland, vi. 101
- Pococke, Edward, i. 344
- Pole, Reginald, iii. 18
- Pollexfen, counsel for Baxter, ii. 67
- Counsel for the bishops, iii. 111, 114. Appointed Chief Justice of Common Pleas, iv. 23
- Polwarth, Lord (Sir Patrick Hume), vii. 117. Takes part in Argyle's expedition to Scotland, 129. His disputes with Argyle, 130, 133. Escapes to the Continent, 136. Joins William III. at the Hague, iii. 196. Attends meeting of Scotchmen in London, 353. Joins the opposition to Government at

COMPOSER

- Edinburgh. 364—381. Raised to the Peerage, vi. 390. Made Lord Chancellor of Scotland: gives the casting vote for the execution of Thomas Aikenhead, vii. 418
- Pomponne: his share in the conversation with Portland on the Spanish Succession, viii. 103, 104
- Ponet, Bishop, an English Reformer, i. 51
- "Pope, burning of the," iii. 126; viii. 293
- Popish Plot, i. 242, 247. Reaction in regard to, 268
- Porter, George, a Jacobite adventurer, vii. 195. Heads a Jacobite riot, 214. Admitted to Barclay's assassination plot, 284—294. Arrested, 301. Gives evidence against his confederates, 303, 345. His dealings with the agents of Fenwick, 345. Gives information of the intrigue, 346
- Porter, Sir Charles, one of William III.'s Lords Justices for Ireland, v. 311. Signs the treaty of Limerick, vi. 69, 108
- Portland, Earl of, afterwards Duke (William Bentinck); his fidelity to William III., ii. 427. His mission to England in 1687, 446. Letter of William to him, iii. 186. His conversation with Burnet, 393. Appointed Groom of the Stole, iv. 25. Raised to the peerage, 125. Accompanies William to Ireland, v. 233. His Dutch cavalry at the battle of the Boyne, 257. Accompanies William to Holland, vi. 1. Sent to consult Sir William Temple, 381. His conduct in the matter of the East India Company, vii. 180. Sent to summon Boufflers to surrender Namur, 223. Proposed grant of Crown Lands in Wales to, 277. Receives information of the assassination plot, 293. Sent to England by William to raise money, 333. His meetings with Boufflers, 429, 430. Settles the terms of peace, 431. Sent Ambassador to France, viii. 78. His deportment towards William III., 79. His jealousy of the Earl of Albemarle, 80. His embassy in Paris,

POWES

81. Splendour of his equipage, 81. Impression on the French people: is personal popularity, 85. Reception by the King, 86. His demand for the removal of James II.'s Coat from St. Germain's, 87, 88. Remonstrates against the countenance given to assassins, 89. Annoyances caused by the presence of the Court of St. Germain's, 91. His silence on the subject of the Spanish Succession, 92—102. His discussion with Pomponne and Torcy, 103—105. Applies to William for instructions, 105. His answer to the French negotiators: his farewell interview with Lewis XIV.: honours paid to him, 107. His misbehaviour to William III., 117. Commissioner for signing the Treaty of Loo, 138. His continued hostility to Albemarle, 183. Repels the King's advances, 184. Retires from Court, 185. His presence at the death-bed of William III., 303
- Portman, Sir William, takes Monmouth prisoner, ii. 196. Joins William Prince of Orange, iii. 247
- Portocarrero, Cardinal; his intrigues at Madrid in behalf of the French: becomes Prime Minister, viii. 188. His infidelity and hypocrisy, 189, 190. Practises on the king's superstition, 194
- Port Royal, destroyed by an earthquake, vi. 302
- Portsmouth, James II. at, iii. 25
- Portsmouth, Duchess of, i. 217, 268; ii. 3. Her conduct during the last illness of Charles II., 5, 9
- Post Office, profits of, assigned to James, Duke of York, i. 300. Service of, under Charles II., 401. Revenue of, 402
- Poussin, French, ambassador, ordered to leave England, viii. 289—291
- Powell, Sir John, ii. 511. One of the judges at the bishops' trial, 371; iii. 110. Delivers his opinion, 119. Dismissed, 156. Restored to the Bench, iv. 23. Presides on Anderton's trial, vii. 42
- Powis, Sir Thomas, Solicitor General, ii.

ROMAN CATHOLIC

293. His advice to James, 296. His intrigue in favour of Catharine Sedley, 325. His loss of influence, 329—404. Made Ecclesiastical Commissioner, 351. Attempt to convert him to Popery, 406. His conferences with Popish divines, 407. His interview with Barillon, 408. His distress; his conversation with the King, 409. His dismissal, 410, 411. Unworthily regarded as a martyr for the Church, 412. Effects of his dismissal, 417. Lord Lieutenant of Hertfordshire, iii. 62. His proposal for calling a Parliament, 245. His speech in the Council of Lords, 263. Speaks in favour of a regency, 374. Takes the oath of allegiance to William III., iv. 34. Employed to mediate with the nonjuring Bishops, vi. 35. His dislike of the Marlboroughs' influence over Princess Anne, 174. Made Privy Councillor, 190. Manages the conference with the Commons, in the question of naval affairs, 314. Supports the Bill for regulating State Trials, vii. 101. Resists Fenwick's attainder, 393. Brings forward the subject of the Scottish colonization scheme, viii. 213
- Roman Catholic clergy; their influence in the amalgamation of races, i. 23. In the abolition of slavery, 25
- Roman Catholic religion; social benefits of, i. 23. Equalising tendencies of, 24. Hatred of, in England, 240. Ferment against, 244
- Roman Catholic country gentlemen, iii. 66, 69, note
- Roman Catholic divines, overmatched by Protestant writers, ii. 365
- Roman Catholics; their principle of resistance to Sovereigns, i. 60. Attached to the Royalist Party, 106. Causes of antipathy to, in England, ii. 259. Why discredited, 260. Moderate section of, 299. Violent party of, 301. Question of removal of disabilities from, 497. Undue employment of, by James II., 499

ROSEN

- Romans in Britain, i. 4
- Rome, Church of; benefits of, in dark ages, i. 23, 24. Becomes obstructive to progress, 49. Its tenets, 54. Uniformity of its services, 54
- Rome, Court of; its policy, ii. 40. Advises moderation to James II., 264, 274. Reprobrates Lewis XIV.'s conduct to the Huguenots, 269
- Rome, Saxon pilgrimages to, i. 9. English embassy at, ii. 526. Privileges of ambassadors in, iii. 174. Report of William III.'s death arrives at, v. 277
- Romney, Earl of (Henry Sidney), iii. 141. His conversation with Halifax, 142. Transcribes the invitation to William Prince of Orange, 146. Arrives in Holland, 180. His intrigue with Lady Sunderland, 184. One of the Lords Justices for Ireland, v. 311. Succeeds Shrewsbury as Secretary of State, 356. His interview with Penn, vi. 31. Made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 191, 376. Adjourns the Parliament, 379. His recall, 380. His display of fireworks in St. James's Park, vii. 243. Grant of forfeited Irish property to him, viii. 257
- Ronquillo, Spanish ambassador; his house plundered by rioters, iii. 301. His account of James II.'s conduct in Ireland, iv. 232
- Rooke, Sir George, Rear-Admiral, escorts William III. to Holland, vi. 1. Leads the flotilla at the battle of La Hogue, 247. Convoys the Smyrna fleet, vii. 38. Attacked by the French; escapes, 39. His evidence before the Commons, 94. His dispute with Lord Orford, viii. 180
- Rookwood, Ambrose; his share in the assassination plot, vii. 284. Arrested, 297. His trial, 313. Execution, 313
- Rose Tavern, the, meetings of Whig members at, vii. 368
- Rosen, Count of, accompanies James II. to Ireland, iv. 172. Commands the troops besieging Londonderry, 194. Returns with James to Dublin,

ROSES

204. Resumes the command of the siege of Londonderry, 237. His barbarity, 238, 239. Recalled to Dublin, 240. Recalled to France, v. 215
- Roses, Wars of the, i. 21. Destruction of great houses in, 39
- Rosewell, Thomas, ii. 222
- Ross, Lord, iv. 310. A confederate of Montgomery, v. 317. Betrays his conspiracy, 332
- Roundheads, designation of, i. 104. The party, how composed, 106. Their arguments, 108. Their disputes with the Cavaliers after the Restoration, 161—166
- Royal Society founded, i. 422
- Royalists, in the Long Parliament, i. 103. Dissatisfied with Charles II., 195—197. Their aversion to a standing army, 304
- Royston, military exactions at, vii. 174
- Rumbold, Richard, ii. 104. Accompanies Argyle, 121. Takes the Castle of Ardinglass, 133. Endeavours to support Argyle's authority, 135. His capture, 143. Executed, 144. His justification of the Rye House Plot, 145
- Rump. See Parliament, the Long
- Rumsey, John; his evidence against Cornish, ii. 246
- Rupert, Prince; his land and sea service, i. 312. His scientific pursuits, 423
- Russell, Edward. See Orford, Earl of
- Russell, Edward (cousin to the above); joins William Prince of Orange, iii. 239
- Russell, Lady Rachel, iii. 391; v. 3. Her letter to Halifax, 33. Refuses to allow her son to be a candidate for Middlesex, vii. 246. Intercedes with William III. in behalf of Lord Clancarty, viii. 31
- Russell, Lord William; his dealings with the French ambassador, i. 237. Becomes a Privy Councillor, 252. His execution, 279. Attended by Burnet in his last moments, ii. 435. His attainder reversed, v. 2. Inquiry into his trial, 140

SAINT VICTOR

- Russia, insignificance of (time of Charles II.) i. 206. Ignorance in regard to, in the reign of William III., viii. 70. Trade with, 71. Early English embassies, their description of the barbarism of the court and capital, 71. Barbarism of the Russian legations in England, 72
- Rutland, John, Earl of, iii. 60. Joins the rising in the North, 252
- Ruvigny, Marquess of. See Galway, Earl of
- Rye House Plot, i. 278. Rumbold's justification of, ii. 145
- Ryswick, Congress of; questions of precedence, and delays, vii. 424—426. Terms agreed upon, 433. The treaty signed, 457
- SABBATH, Judaical, adopted by the Puritans, i. 84
- Sacheverell, William, iii. 365; iv. 21. His clause of the Corporation Bill, v. 146
- Sackville, Colonel Edward, a Jacobite agent; his interview with Marlborough, vi. 61. Forwards Marlborough's letter to Melfort, vii. 134, note
- Saint Germain's, iii. 345. James II.'s court at, vii. 1. Its fanaticism and jealousies, 4
- Saint Helena, insurrection at, against the East India Company, vi. 140
- Saint James's Square, i. 371. Nuisances in, 373
- Saint Lewis, order of, vii. 19
- St. Mawes, borough of, viii. 296
- Saint Paul's Cathedral, the rebuilding of, i. 365. Opened for public worship on the Thanksgiving Day, vii. 442
- Saint Ruth, French General, arrives at Limerick, vi. 80. Sends reinforcements to Athlone, 86. Thwarted by Tyrconnel, 87. His jealousy of Sarsfield, 87. Retreats, 90. Determines to fight, 91. Gives battle at Aghrim, 94. Killed in the battle, 95
- Saint Simon, Duke of, vi. 276. His opinion of Lord Portland, vii. 28; 428, note
- Saint Victor, aids the flight of the Queen and Prince of Wales, iii. 290

SALISBURY

Salisbury, William's entry into, iii. 276
 Salisbury, James Cecil, Earl of, converted to Popery, ii. 453. Conflict of his servants with the populace, iii. 125. Impeached, v. 139. His signature forged by Robert Young, vi. 247
 Salisbury, John, editor of the Flying Post, vii. 407
 Sancroft, Archbishop, attends at Charles II.'s death-bed, ii. 7. Consulted regarding the papers left in the handwriting of Charles II., 298. Declines an Ecclesiastical Commissionership, 350. Meetings of prelates at his house, iii. 83. Draws up the petition of the bishops, 85. (See Bishops, the Seven.) His return to his palace after the acquittal, 105. His pastoral letter, 129. His counsel to James II., 207. Assures James of his loyalty, 217. His conversation with James, 333. Presents a petition for the calling a Parliament, 244. Presides over the meeting of Lords at Guildhall, 295. The head of the Royalist party, 333. His plan for a Regency, 358, 359, note. Absents himself from the Lords' debate thereupon, 374. Inconsistency of his principles, 374. Refuses to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, iv. 33. His seclusion, 79. His scruples in regard to the consecration of Burnet, and weak conduct, 79. Becomes a nonjuror, v. 78. Remains in his palace on sufferance, 163. Offers of the Government to, vi. 35. His obstinacy, 40. Ejected from Lambeth, 41. His anger, 41. His hatred to the Established Church, 42. Provides for a succession of non-juring prelates, 43, 44. His name forged by Robert Young, 255. Regarded with aversion at the Court of St. Germain's, vii. 4
 Sanctuaries, advantages of, i. 8
 Sarsfield, Patrick, at the battle of Sedgewood, ii. 189. Repulsed by the Prince of Orange's troops at Wincanton, iii. 253. His birth and early career, iv. 211. His successes in Connanght, v.

SCHOMBERG

54. Insists on defending Limerick, 301. Surprises the English artillery, 304. His administration at Limerick, vi. 78. His colleagues are jealous of him, 87. His advice to avoid a battle, 91. Commands the reserve at Aghrim, 96. Retreats to Limerick, 101. Despairs of the defence, 104. His interview with Ruvigny, 105. His dispute with Ginkell, 110. Enlists Irish volunteers for the French service, 113. Desertions from his regiments, 114. Scene at his departure from Cork, 116. Destined to take part in the French invasion of England, 227. Distinguishes himself at the battle of Steinkirk, 289. Mortally wounded at Landen, vii. 33
 Savile, Henry, anecdote of, related by the Duke of Leeds, vii. 186
 Savoy, the, establishment of Jesuits in, ii. 354. Privileges of, abolished, vii. 410
 Sawyer, Sir Robert, Attorney General, ii. 338. Dismissed, iii. 76. Counsel for the bishops, 111. Raises difficulties in regard to William III.'s title, 338. Called to account for his conduct in the prosecution of Sir Thomas Armstrong, v. 153—156. Elected for Cambridge University, 165
 Saxons in Britain, i. 4. Their heathenism, 5. Their conversion, 6. Progress in civilisation, 9. Their struggle with the Danes, 10. Tyrannised over by the Normans, 13. Amalgamated with the Normans, 16. Saxon colonists in Ireland, ii. 130
 Saxony, Elector of, his unreasonable demands in the alliance against France, vi. 269. William III. compounds with him, 274. His quarrel with Austria, vii. 23
 Saxton, witness against Lord Delamere, ii. 294
 Scarsdale, Earl of, iii. 60
 Schoening, Saxon Minister, vi. 274. His venality; arrested by the Austrian authorities, 274
 Schomberg, Frederick, Count of, afterwards Duke, appointed Lieutenant of

SHREWSBURY

- for Bookwood, vii. 313. Counsel for Fenwick, 376. Elected for Exeter in 1698, viii. 126. His previous career, 127
- Shrewsbury, Countess of, iii. 55; v. 227
- Shrewsbury, Charles Talbot, Earl of, iii. 55. Dismissed by James II. from the Lord Lieutenancy of Staffordshire, 56. Joins the revolutionary conspiracy, 142. Signs the invitation to the Prince of Orange, 147. Enters Bristol, 274. Bearer of the Message to James from Windsor, 222. Secretary of State to William and Mary, iv. 20. His dissensions with the Earl of Nottingham, 66. Decline of his political influence, v. 145. Becomes a secret Jacobite, 184. His interview with Lady Marlborough, and with the Princess Anne, 196. His character, 226, 227. His treasonable correspondence with James II., 228. Resigns the Secretaryship, 229. His conduct after the battle of Beachy Head, 245. Brings forward the Triennial Bill, vi. 355. Signs the protest against the censorship of the press, 374. His communications with Middleton, vii. 12. Refuses the Secretaryship of State, 96. His interview with Montgomery, 129. Accepts the Seals, 131. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, 190. His efforts to raise money for the war, 333. Implicated in Fenwick's confession, 352. His demeanour, 355. Retires from London, 356. Remonstrated with by Somers and by the King, 357. Falsely accused by Matthew Smith; leaves England; his remorse, 400, 401
- Shrewsbury, Earls of, iii. 54
- Sidney, Algernon, receives money from France, i. 238. His execution, 279. His attainder reversed, v. 4. Inquiry into his trial, 140
- Sidney, Henry. See Romney, Earl of
- Skelton, Colonel Bevil, English envoy at Amsterdam, ii. 126. His endeavours to prevent Monmouth from sailing,

SOLMES

- 148, 149. English envoy at Venise; his efforts to save James II. in 18. Recalled and committed to the Tower, 190. Appointed Lieutenant of a Tower, 267
- Skinner's Company; their hall in Dogate, vi. 148
- Slane Castle, v. 254
- Sleat, Macdonald of. See Macdonald Skane, i. 426
- Smith, Aaron, made Solicitor to the Treasury, iv. 27. Examined by the Lords on the commitment of Marlborough and Huntingdon, vi. 30. His influence with Sir John Trenchard, 385. Investigates the Lancashire plot, vii. 145. His mismanagement, 149. His exoneration by the Lords, 154. Appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, vii. 237
- Smith, Adam; his alarm at the National Debt, vi. 339
- Smith, Dr. Thomas, iii. 20, 22. Aids James II.'s attack on Magdalen College, Oxford, 22
- Smith, John, made Commissioner of the Treasury, vii. 131
- Smith, Matthew, a spy, vii. 400
- Smith, Robert; his "Dying Testimony," v. 341, note
- Smollett, Tobias; his representations of naval officers, i. 316
- Smuggling, Systematic, in 1698, viii. 51
- Smyrna fleet, plan for convoying, vii. 37. Attacked and dispersed in Lagos Bay, 39
- Snatt, a nonjuring clergyman, assists in the absolution of Friend and Parkyns at Tyburn, vii. 311
- "Soho;" Monmouth's cry at Sedgemoor, ii. 186, and note
- Soho Square, i. 370
- Solmes, Count of, occupies Whitehall, for the Prince of Orange, iii. 324. Commands the Dutch troops in Ireland, v. 35. Leads the charge at the battle of the Boyne, 263. Left in command of William III.'s forces in Ireland, 296. Commands the British at Steinkirk, vi. 289. Fails to support Mackay's division, 290. Outcry against him, 293. Complaints against him in Parliament, 311, 312. Killed at Landen, vii. 30

SOMERS

Somers, John (afterwards Lord), junior counsel for the Bishops, iii. 112. His speech at the trial, 118. Enters Parliament, 366. At the conference with the Lords on the question of declaring the throne vacant, 394. Frames the Declaration of Right, 400. Appointed Solicitor General, iv. 24. Manager for the Commons of the Conference in the case of Oates, v. 13, 14. Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, 145. His speech on the Bill declaring the Acts of the Parliament of 1689 valid, 199. Conducts the prosecution of Preston and Ashton, vi. 17. Attorney General, 318. Appointed Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, 387. His eminent qualities, vii. 71. His conversation and demeanour, 72. His patronage of merit, 73. Libels against him, 74, and note. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, 190. Promotes the reconciliation of the Princess Anne with William III., 193. Takes part in the discussions on the Currency, 260. His proposed expedient, 265. Made Lord Chancellor, 411. His pamphlet against disbanding the army, known as "The Balancing Letter," viii. 11—16. His retirement, for his health, to Tunbridge Wells, 128. Receives a despatch announcing the First Partition Treaty, 135. His representation to the King of the feeling of the country, 136. Remonstrates with William on his resolution to abandon England, 150, 151. His speech on the Bill for disbanding the army, 166. His rapid rise, and modesty; hatred of, by the violent Tory leaders, 239. His connexion with the proceedings of William Kidd, 242—245. Parliamentary attack upon, 248. Triumphant exculpation, 248. Grant of Crown property conferred on him, 251. Parliamentary attack upon, 253, 254. Rancour of the Tory leaders towards him, 271. His prudent advice on the subject of the Resumption Bill, 274. Unsuccessful motion for his exclusion from office, 277, 278

SPAIN

Somerset, Charles Seymour, Duke of, iii. 2. Assists at the coronation of William and Mary, 2

Somerset, Edward Seymour, Duke of, Protector, ii. 207

Somersetshire; traditions of the peasantry, ii. 183. Their valour at the battle of Sedgemoor, 189. Jeffreys in, 224—228

Sophia, Princess, placed in the succession of the crown, v. 17

South, Robert, i. 344

Southampton, Thomas Wriothesley, Earl of, i. 187. Joins in the resistance of the Peers to the Resumption Bill, viii. 269

Southampton House, near Holborn, i. 370

Southwark, election for (1701), viii. 295.

Spain; the monarchy of, becomes absolute, i. 44. Becomes formidable to England, 63. State of (time of Charles II.), 205. War with France, 208. Horses from, 327. Feeling of, towards England, ii. 38. The court of, condemns Lewis XIV.'s conduct to the Protestants, 269. State of, in 1692, vi. 270. Miserable state of its army and navy (1694) vii. 140. Conduct of, in the peace negotiations, 421—434. Expected vacancy of the crown, viii. 92. Magnitude and importance of the dominions at stake, 93. Weakness of the empire, 94. Its tendency to dissolution, 95. Supremacy of Castile, 96. Candidates for the succession, the Dauphin, the Emperor Leopold, 97. The Electoral Prince of Bavaria, 99. Factions in the court of Madrid, 100. Discussion regarding the Succession between the Duke of Portland and Lewis XIV.'s Ministers, 102—104. Proposals on the part of France, 106. Discussions at Newmarket between William III.

SPANHEIM

- and the Count of Tallard, 111—114. Renewed negotiations at Loo, the First Partition Treaty, 128—135. The provisions become known to the Spaniards, 138. Complications caused by the death of the Prince of Bavaria, 168. Renewed discussions, 184. The Second Partition Treaty, 186. Riots in Madrid, 187. Consequent supremacy of the French faction under Cardinal Portocarrero, 188. Information received of the Second Partition Treaty, 192. Sentiments towards William III., 193. Insulting message, 194. Suspension of diplomatic relations between England and Spain, 195. Previous quarrel on the subject of Darien, see Darien
- Spanheim, Ezekiel; his share in arranging the rejoicings at the Hague for William III.'s entry in 1691, vi. 5
- Speke, Hugh, ii. 360. Distributes Johnson's Tracts, 361. Claims the authorship of the forged Proclamation against Papists, iii. 272. Asserts himself the contriver of the "Irish night," 308
- Spencer, Charles Lord (son of the Earl of Sunderland), his entry on public life, viii. 4. His taste for books, and Whiggism, 5. Object of his policy, 6
- Spenser, Edmund; his opinion of Irish ballads, i. 68
- Spires, destroyed by the French, iv. 128
- Sprat, Thomas, Bishop of Rochester, i. 344. An Ecclesiastical Commissioner, ii. 351. Reads the Declaration of Indulgence in Westminster Abbey, iii. 90. Resigns the Commissionership, 158. Summoned by James II. to a conference, 232. Takes the oath of allegiance to William, iv. 33. Assists at the coronation of William and Mary, 122. Ecclesiastical Commissioner under William, v. 98. Withdraws from the Ecclesiastical Commission, 98. Treasonable paper hidden in his palace, vi. 256. His character, 257. Arrested, 259. His innocence proved, 260
- Stadtholders of Holland, i. 225

STOCKJOBBER

- Stafford, William Howard, Viscount, executed, i. 270. His attainder reversed, ii. 99. Burnet's exhortations to, 435
- Stair, Master of. See Dalrymple, Sir John
- Stamford, Earl of, a Parliamentary general; his defeat at Stratton, i. 119
- Stamford, Thomas Grey, Earl of, accused of participation in the Rye House plot, ii. 289. Joins the rising for the Prince of Orange in the North, iii. 252. Chairman of the "Murder Committee," v. 140. Entertains William III. at Bradgate, vii. 241
- Standing armies, strong aversion to, in England, viii. 3. Arguments against them, 7—9. The arguments self-contradictory, 10. Lord Somers' reply, 11—16. Contingency of a French invasion, 12. Reference to Grecian history, 13, and note. To the army of Hannibal, 15
- Star Chamber, i. 92. Abolished, 101
- Steinkirk, battle of, vi. 289—292. Fight between the French household troops and the British division, 290 French and allied losses; moral effect of the victory, 291, 292
- Steward, Lord High, Court of the, ii. 292; vi. 319
- Stewart of Ballenach, iv. 367
- Stewart, James; his correspondence with the Grand Pensionary Fagel, ii. 525. Attached to the Whig-Jacobite party in Edinburgh, v. 331. His conduct as Lord Advocate in the prosecution of Thomas Aikenhead, vii. 417
- Stewarts of Appin, iv. 331, 344
- Stillingfleet, Edward, i. 344. His answer to the papers found in the writing of Charles II., ii. 407. Declares against reading the Declaration of Indulgence, iii. 80. A member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 96. Made Bishop of Worcester, 113. His claims for the Primacy, vii. 152
- Stirling, plan of the Scotch Jacobites for secession to, iv. 282, 291
- Stockjobbing, origin of, vi. 330, and

STOREY

- note. Was anterior to the National Debt, 333. Fluctuations in the Stock Exchange, viii. 169
- Storey, Samuel, ii. 241
- Stout, Quaker family at Hertford, endeavour to fix a charge of murder on Spencer Cowper, viii. 231—233. See Cowper, Spencer
- Strabane, skirmish at, iv. 193
- Strabane, Claude Hamilton, Lord, iv. 203
- Strafford, Thomas Wentworth, Earl of; his character and policy, i. 89, 90. Deprecates Charles I.'s Scotch war, 98. Persists in his policy, 100. His impeachment and execution, 101. Precedent of his attainder quoted, vii. 383, 385
- Strafford, Earl of, included in the Irish Act of Attainder, iv. 224
- Strasburg, retained by the French in the Treaty of Ryswick, vii. 435
- Stratton, battle of, i. 119
- Street, Baron; his collusive resistance to James II. on the question of the Dispensing power, ii. 339
- Stukeley's Itinerarium Curiosum, i. 301, note
- Subsidies, how raised; their diminished productiveness, vi. 324, and note
- Succession. See Hereditary Right
- Suffolk, wages in, i. 432
- Sunderland, Countess of: her intrigue with Henry Sidney, iii. 184. Her letters, 185
- Sunderland, Robert Spencer, Earl of; his political character, i. 256, 257. Supports the Exclusion Bill, 268. His intrigues, 286. Retained in office by James II., ii. 21. Conforms to Roman Catholic observances, 46. His letter to Penn, 236, note. Encourages the errors of James II., 318. His motives; bribed by France, 319. Joins the Jesuitical cabal, 319. Converted by James, 320. His intrigues against Rochester, 321. Made an Ecclesiastical Commissioner, 352. Bribed by Tyrconnel, 414. Anecdote of, iii. 51. Made Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, 65. His advice with regard

SWIFT

- to the Seven Bishops, 92. Recommends James II. to make concessions, 107. Professes himself a Papist, 108. Proves the publication of the alleged libel by the bishops, 117. His suspected treachery to James II., 181. His official gains, 182. Alarmed for his safety, 183. His secret correspondence with the Prince of Orange, 184. Deludes James into security, 187. Disgraced, 211. His protestations of loyalty, 212. His secret services to William vii. 62. His flight to Holland, 63. His return to England, 64. Ingratiates himself with William, 66. Advises the employment of Whig ministers, 68. Promotes the reconciliation of William and the Princess Anne, 190. Receives William at Althorpe, 240. Induces Goldolphin to resign office, 367. Appointed Lord Chamberlain and one of the Lords Justices, 413. Alarm at his appointment, viii. 3—7. His political character, 4. Attacks on him in the House of Commons; his friends in the House, 19. Utterly distrusted by his colleagues, 20. His alarm at the clamour raised against him, 20. Resigns office, 22
- Supremacy, Act of, ii. 344. Curtailment of its powers, 345
- Supremacy, oath of, difficulties in regard to, iv. 103—110. The Houses of Parliament differ, 118
- Supremacy, royal, i. 56. Assertion of, by Henry VIII. and Cranmer, 57. The Claim modified by Elizabeth, 58
- Sutherland, Colonel Hugh, repulsed by the Enniskilleners, iv. 235
- Sutherland, Earl of, v. 325
- Sweden, a member of the Triple Alliance, i. 210. Its jealousy of England and Holland, vi. 265, 266
- Swedish troops of William Prince of Orange, iii. 228
- Swift, Jonathan, constancy of the Irish populace to, ii. 210. His patriotism confined to the Saxon inhabitants of

SWISS

Ireland, vi. 118, and note. His birth and early career, 382. Secretary to Sir William Temple, 382. Bearer of a letter to William III. on the Triennial Bill, 383. His character of Somers, vii. 75, note. Of Wharton, 84. Swiss troops in the army of William Prince of Orange, iii. 229

TAAFE, the informer, an agent of Trenchard, vii. 144. His proceedings in Lancashire, 146. His evidence defeats the prosecution, 149. Sent to prison by the Lords, 154

Tallard, Count of, his embassy to England, viii. 107. His instructions, 108. Splendour of his appointments, 109. Accompanies William III. to Newmarket, 110. Discussions on the Spanish Succession, 112, 113. His impression of William's firmness and good faith, 113. Renewed negotiations at Loo, 128. The treaty signed, 138

Talnish, Thomas, serves under Marlborough at Walcourt, v. 62. Serves under Ginkell in Ireland, vi. 82. At Athlone, 89. His conduct in the battle of Aghrim, 96. His high military character, 312. At the battle of Landen, vii. 31. Commands the attack on Brest; attempts a landing, 136. Mortally wounded, 137

Tangier, garrisoned by the English, i. 198. Relinquished by Charles II., 274. Colonel Kirke at, ii. 211

Tankerville, Ford Grey, Earl of (Lord Grey of Wark); a political prisoner in the Tower; escapes; his trial for the seduction of Lady Henrietta Berkeley, ii. 105, 106. Lands at Lyme with Monmouth, 151. His flight from Bridport, 155. Resists Monmouth's design of deserting his followers, 180. His cavalry routed at Sedgemoor, 188. Accompanies Monmouth's flight; taken, 194. His interview with the King, 201. Ransomed, 241. His speech on the Association, vii. 315. Supports the Bill for Fenwick's attain-

TENISON

der, 393. His speech on the Bill for disbanding the army, viii. 166. Appointed First Lord of the Treasury; his unhappy career, 237

Tarbet, Viscount; plan recommended by him for the pacification of the Highlands, iv. 346. His plan adopted by William III.'s government, vi. 194

Taunton, prosperity of (1685), ii. 162. Its civil and religious politics, 164. Young ladies of; their ransom assigned to the Queen's maids of honour, 235. Favour shown to, by James II., ii. 474

Taxation, parliamentary consent necessary to, i. 32. Importance of this right, 44. The right involved in the question of Ship-money, 94

Tea, consumption of (1691), vi. 136, and note

Teignmouth, destroyed by the French, v. 286. The sufferers relieved by church-collections through England, 288

Tempest, a Jacobite emissary, arrested, v. 224

Temple, John (son of Sir William), employed by William III. in Irish affairs, iv. 156. His suicide, 183

Temple, Sir Richard, ii. 277

Temple, Sir William; negotiates the Triple Alliance, i. 210. Employed in the negotiations with Holland, 233. His character, 210. His scheme of Government, 250, 251. His retirement from public affairs, iv. 156. His work on Holland, vi. 335. His house at Moor Park, 381. Consulted by William III. on the Triennial Bill; sends his secretary, Jonathan Swift, to the King, 382

Tenison, Dr., i. 344. Visits Monmouth, ii. 203. Joins in the consultations of the Bishops, iii. 83, 85. Appointed a member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 96. His examination of the Liturgy, 101. Made Archbishop of Canterbury, vii. 152. Attends Queen Mary on her death-bed, 158. His funeral sermon, 162. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, 190. Joins

TEST ACT

- in the resistance of the Peers to the Resumption Bill, viii. 268. Withdraws his opposition at a critical moment, 275. Attends William III. on his death-bed, 309
- Test Act, the, i. 231. Violated by Charles II., 282. Also by James II., ii. 265. Proposed repeal of, iv. 102, 112
- Teutonic languages coincident with Protestantism, i. 69
- Tewkesbury, proceedings of the Regulators of Corporations at, iii. 73
- Thanet, Thomas, Earl of, iii. 60
- Thomas, Bishop of Worcester, his death, v. 78
- Thomond Bridge, affair at, vi. 103
- Thoresby, Ralph, i. 387, 388
- "Thorough," the, of Strafford, i. 90, 95
- Tillotson, Archbishop, i. 344. Dryden's testimony to, 345, note. His sermon against the Roman Catholics, ii. 262. Excluded by James II. from the discussion with Popish divines, 407. His share in the conversion of the Earl of Shrewsbury, iii. 55. Attends consultations of the London clergy, 82, 85. His influence over the Princess Anne, 391. His character as a preacher, v. 95. A member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, 96. Destined by William III. for the primacy; his reluctance, 113. His letters to Lady Russell, 114, note. His evidence in favour of Halifax, 141. Consecrated Archbishop of Canterbury, vi. 37. General respect for; insulted by the Jacobites, 38, 39, and note. Fuller's conduct to, 183. His death, vii. 150. His funeral, 151
- Tindal, Matthew, ii. 454
- Titus, Silas, a Presbyterian, sworn of the Privy Council, iii. 157. Deserts James II., 321. His speeches in favour of the Triennial Bill, vii. 104
- "Tityre Tus," i. 375
- Toddington Church, ii. 208
- Toleration Bill, the, moved by the Earl of Nottingham, iv. 84. Conditions annexed to, 85—87. Its inconsisten-

TOURVILLE

- cies in theory, 89. And practical merits, 90. The Bill passed, 92
- Torbay, iii. 222
- Torcy, minister of Lewis XIV.; his share in the conversation with Portland on the Spanish Succession, viii. 103—105. Resists the recognition of James III. by Lewis XIV., 283, 285, 286. His excuses to the British Ambassador, 289
- Tories; their enthusiasm for James II. at his accession, ii. 50. Their repugnance to a standing army, 258. Their zeal for Church and King, 299. Change in their views on the subject of passive obedience, iii. 131, 138. Their dissatisfaction with the Revolution, iv. 7—10. Their joy at the dissolution of Parliament by William III. in 1690, v. 162. Their predominance in the new Parliament, 200. Their opinions on the war, vii. 68. Chiefs of their party, 55—51
- Torquay, iii. 222
- Torrington, Earl of (Admiral Arthur Herbert), refuses to support James II.'s policy; dismissed from his offices, ii. 468. His communications with Dykvelt, 514. Bearer of the invitation to William of Orange, iii. 147. Admiral of William's fleet, 218. Appointed First Commissioner of the Admiralty, iv. 20. Attacks the French fleet in Bantry Bay, 208. His maladministration of the navy, v. 88, 89. Threatens to resign the command of the fleet, 180. Takes command of the united English and Dutch fleet, 236. Receives an order to fight, 239. Resolves to expose the Dutch ships, 239. Defeated off Beachy Head, 240. Proceedings against him, 350. Tried by court martial, 352. Acquitted, dismissed from the navy, 353
- Torture, never legal in England, i. 33. Last infliction of, 99. In Scotland, iii. 290; iv. 301
- Tory; origin of the term, i. 267
- Tourville, Count of, enters the British Channel, v. 236. His victory off Beachy Head, 240. Anchors in Tor-

SWISS

Ireland, vi. 118, and note. His birth and early career, 382. Secretary to Sir William Temple, 382. Bearer of a letter to William III. on the Triennial Bill, 383. His character of Somers, vii. 75, note. Of Wharton, 84. Swiss troops in the army of William Prince of Orange, iii. 229

TAAFE, the informer, an agent of Trenchard, vii. 144. His proceedings in Lancashire, 146. His evidence defeats the prosecution, 149. Sent to prison by the Lords, 154

Tallard, Count of, his embassy to England, viii. 107. His instructions, 108. Splendour of his appointments, 109. Accompanies William III. to Newmarket, 110. Discussions on the Spanish Succession, 112, 113. His impression of William's firmness and good faith, 113. Renewed negotiations at Loo, 128. The treaty signed, 138

Talmash, Thomas, serves under Marlborough at Walcourt, v. 62. Serves under Ginkell in Ireland, vi. 82. At Athlone, 89. His conduct in the battle of Aghrim, 96. His high military character, 312. At the battle of Landen, vii. 31. Commands the attack on Brest; attempts a landing, 136. Mortally wounded, 137

Tangier, garrisoned by the English, i. 198. Relinquished by Charles II., 274. Colonel Kirke at, ii. 211

Tankerville, Ford Grey, Earl of (Lord Grey of Wark); a political prisoner in the Tower; escapes; his trial for the seduction of Lady Henrietta Berkeley, ii. 105, 106. Lands at Lyme with Monmouth, 151. His flight from Bridport, 155. Resists Monmouth's design of deserting his followers, 180. His cavalry routed at Sedgemoor, 188. Accompanies Monmouth's flight; taken, 194. His interview with the King, 201. Ransomed, 241. His speech on the Association, vii. 315. Supports the Bill for Fenwick's attain-

TENISON

der, 393. His speech on the Bill for disbanding the army, viii. 166. Appointed First Lord of the Treasury; his unhappy career, 237

Tarbet, Viscount; plan recommended by him for the pacification of the Highlands, iv. 346. His plan adopted by William III.'s government, vi. 194

Taunton, prosperity of (1685), ii. 162. Its civil and religious politics, 164. Young ladies of; their ransom assigned to the Queen's maids of honour, 235. Favour shown to, by James II., ii. 474

Taxation, parliamentary consent necessary to, i. 32. Importance of this right, 44. The right involved in the question of Ship-money, 94

Tea, consumption of (1691), vi. 136, and note

Teignmouth, destroyed by the French, v. 286. The sufferers relieved by church-collections through England, 288

Tempest, a Jacobite emissary, arrested, v. 224

Temple, John (son of Sir William), employed by William III. in Irish affairs, iv. 156. His suicide, 183

Temple, Sir Richard, ii. 277

Temple, Sir William; negotiates the Triple Alliance, i. 210. Employed in the negotiations with Holland, 233. His character, 210. His scheme of Government, 250, 251. His retirement from public affairs, iv. 156. His work on Holland, vi. 335. His house at Moor Park, 381. Consulted by William III. on the Triennial Bill; sends his secretary, Jonathan Swift, to the King, 382

Tenison, Dr., i. 344. Visits Monmouth, ii. 203. Joins in the consultations of the Bishops, iii. 83, 85. Appointed a member of the Ecclesiastical Commission, v. 96. His examination of the Liturgy, 101. Made Archbishop of Canterbury, vii. 152. Attends Queen Mary on her death-bed, 158. His funeral sermon, 162. Appointed one of the Lords Justices, 190. Joins

TWEEDDALE

- Tweeddale, John Hay, Marquess of, appointed Lord High Commissioner for Scotland, vii. 199. Directed to inquire into the massacre of Glencoe, 201. Takes up the schemes of William Paterson, viii. 198. Gives the Royal consent to the Act incorporating the Darien Company, 204. Dismissed by William III., 214
- Twisden, Sir William, ii. 277
- Tyrconnel, Richard Talbot, Earl of, ii. 302. His services to James II., and infamous character, 302. Appointed general of the forces in Ireland, 394. Arrives at Dublin, 399. Remodels the army, 400, 401. His mendacity; advises the repeal of the Act of Settlement; goes to England, 402. Made Lord Deputy of Ireland, 413. His intrigues, 414. Arrives in Ireland, 415. Meets James II. at Chester, iii. 27. His scheme for detaching Ireland from England, 44. His formation of Celtic troops, 163. His violent measures, 167. Negotiates with William III., iv. 155. His messages to France, 159. Calls the Irish to arms, 160. Meets James at Cork, 179. Advises James to remain at Dublin, 190. His conduct at the battle of the Boyne, v. 264. Urges the abandonment of Limerick, 301. Retires to Galway, 302. Goes to France, 310. Returns to Ireland, vi. 79. Thwarts Saint Ruth; his jealousy of Sarsfield, 87. Outcry against him; leaves the camp, 91. In Limerick, 99. His death by apoplexy, 100
- Tyre, commercial prosperity of, viii. 200

- ULSTER, rebellion of the Irish population in, i. 108
- Uniformity, Act of, ii. 472
- University College, Oxford, Popery in, ii. 342
- Universities, English, iii. 7. High consideration of, 7. Their loyalty, 8
- Uzes, Duke of, killed in the battle of Landen, vii. 33

VOSSIUS

- VANDEVELDE, the two brothers, i. 430, 432
- Varelat, i. 429
- Vauban, iii. 192. Assists at the siege of Mons, vi. 15. Takes part in the siege of Namur, 279. Strengthens the defences of Brest, vii. 135
- Vaudemont, the Prince of; his appreciation of Marlborough's military talents, vi. 65. Commands against Villeroy, in Flanders, vii. 215. His skilful retreat, 216. Joins William III. before Namur, 221
- Vendome, Lewis, Duke of, at the battle of Steinkirk, vi. 288. Takes Barcelona, vii. 435
- Venice, commercial prosperity of, viii. 200
- Vernon, made Secretary of State, viii. 19. Elected for Westminster, 125. His vain attempt to resist the violence of the House of Commons on the Resumption Bill, 263
- Vernon Correspondence, vii. 395, note; viii. 160, note
- Verrio, i. 429
- Versailles, Middleton's visit to, vii. 20
- Vestments, ecclesiastical, i. 52, 55
- Victor Amadeus, Duke of Savoy, joins the coalition against France, v. 348. Deserts the coalition, vii. 342
- Victoria, Queen, coronation of, ii. 48
- Vienna threatened by the Turks, ii. 446
- Villénage, extinction of, i. 22
- Villeroy, Marshal, French commander in the Low Countries in 1695, vii. 210. His position, 212. Bombarde Brussels; advances towards Namur, 220, 221. Retreats, 223
- Villiers, Edward, Viscount, English negotiator at Ryawick, vii. 423
- Villiers, Elizabeth, mistress of William III., ii. 430. Entreats Shrewsbury to accept office, vii. 96. Her marriage to George Hamilton, afterwards Earl of Orkney; receives a grant of Crown property in Ireland, viii. 259
- Vossius, Isaac, his computations of population, i. 293

TOWER HAMLETS

- bay; his galleys, 283. Contemplates a landing, 284. Destroys Teignmouth, 286. Leaves the coast, 287. Collects a fleet for the invasion of England, vi. 228. Defeated off La Hogue, 243—247. His brave conduct, 245. His reception at Versailles, 283. Intercepts the Smyrna fleet, vii. 39. Sails for the Mediterranean, 133. Effects a junction with the Toulon fleet; retreats before Russell, 140
- Tower Hamlets, i. 364
- Tower of London, cemetery of, ii. 207
- Treason, Bill for regulating Trials for, vi. 153, 157; vii. 155
- Treasurer, Lord, stipend of, i. 321
- Treby, Sir George, counsel for the bishops, iii. 112. Heads the City deputation to William of Orange, 327. At the conference between the Houses on the Settlement of the Kingdom, 394. Appointed Attorney General, iv. 24. One of the judges on Anderton's trial, vii. 42
- Tredenham, resists the Triennial Bill, vi. 356. Discovered at the supper party at the Blue Posts, viii. 292. Elected for the private borough of St. Mawes, 296
- Trelawney, Colonel Charles, assures William of Orange of his support, iii. 180. Attends James II., 244
- Trelawney, Sir John, Bishop of Bristol, iii. 84. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Excitement in Cornwall in behalf of, 106. Assures the Prince of Orange of his support, 180. Receives William's troops in Bristol, 274
- Trenchard, John, made Secretary of State, vi. 385. His activity against the Jacobites, vii. 143. Apprehends the Lancashire Jacobites, 146. Pamphlet attacks upon, 147. Failure of his health, 153. His death, 213
- Trenchard, John (son of the preceding), his pamphlet in favour of disbanding the army, viii. 7. One of the Commissioners for inquiring into the Irish forfeitures, 256. Violent report framed by him, 257

TUTCHIN

- Trèves, threatened destruction of, iv. 128. Saved by the influence of Madame de Maintenon, 129
- Trevor, Sir John, a creature of Jeffreys; elected Speaker, ii. 38. Lord Caermarthen's agent for bribing Members of Parliament, v. 177. Re-elected Speaker, 186. Mediates with the nonjuring Bishops, vi. 36. First Commissioner of the Great Seal, 386. Accused of corrupt practices, vii. 176. Vote of censure upon him, 178
- Triennial Bill, vi. 335—338. Negated by William III., 384. Again brought in, and rejected by the Commons, vii. 104. Passed, 155
- Triers, Board of, i. 164
- "Trimmers," i. 254
- Trinder, Sergeant, counsel against the bishops, iii. 110
- Triple Alliance, i. 210
- Trumbull, Sir William, Secretary of State, vii. 213. His resignation of the Secretaryship of State, viii. 19, 182
- Tudor Sovereigns, i. 40. Their tyranny, how checked, 41
- Tunbridge Wells, i. 359
- Turberville; his evidence against Stafford, i. 270. Against College, 275
- Turenne, English Puritans in his army, i. 126
- Turks, war with, in Hungary, ii. 112. Besiege Vienna, 446. Their campaign on the Danube in 1689, v. 61. Their successes in 1693, vii. 51
- Turner, Francis, Bishop of Ely; his coronation sermon, ii. 49. Visits Monmouth, 202. Takes part in the deliberations of the bishops, iii. 83, 85. (See Bishops, the Seven.) A nonjuror, v. 78. Joins a Jacobite conspiracy, 357. His letters to St. Germans, 361, and note. Informed against by Preston, vi. 21. Escapes to France, 24
- Turnpike Acts, i. 390
- Tutchin, John, punishment of, ii. 229. His interview with Jeffreys in the Tower, v. 84

WILLIAM L.

75. Their vindictive measures, 138. Their design upon the corporations, 145. Defeated therein, 151. Oppose the King's going to Ireland, 160. Their violence restrained by William III., 163. Their discontent, 183. Their general fidelity; treason of a few, 184. Their tactics in the Parliament of 1690, 198, 199. Propose the Abjuration Bill, 201. Their want of liberality towards the Irish, vi. 120, and notes. Subsequent change in their sentiments, 122. Support William's foreign policy, vii. 68. Their Parliamentary strength and organisation, 70. Chiefs of their party, 70—84. Their feelings in regard to Fenwick's confession, 368. Division in their party on the question of disbanding the army, viii. 7. Success of their administration, 122. Unpopularity of, in 1698, 123. Evils caused by their retention of office after Parliamentary defeats, 162, 163

White. See Albeville, Marquess of
White, Bishop of Peterborough, iii. 83.
(See Bishops, the Seven.) Summoned by James II. to a conference, 232. A nonjuror, v. 78. Attends Farwick on the scaffold, vii. 404

Whitehall, Court of. 1832. In-press burnt down. vii. 18

Whitney, James A. [unclear] : 4
[unclear] [unclear] [unclear] [unclear] [unclear]

Wages: $10.00 per day.
Insurance: $1.00 per month.

1. James M. Smith 2. John H. Smith
 3. John H. Smith 4. John H. Smith

DATE: 10/10/1964

100

WILLIAM II.

His final interview with Philip IV., viii. 172
 William II. of Holland, i. 226
 William, Prince of Orange, afterwards King of England; his birth; succeeds to the government of Holland, i. 226 227. His heroic resistance to the French, 227. His marriage with the Princess Mary, 236. Population returns obtained by, 294. His artillery, 317. His reception of Monmouth in Holland, ii. 107. His advice to Monmouth, 112. His endeavours to prevent Monmouth's attempt, 123, 148. Which are obstructed by the Amsterdam magistrates, 126. Sends back regiments to James II., 149, 173. His personal appearance, 418. Early life and education, 419. Theological opinions, 421. Military talents, 422. His fearlessness, 423. His bad health, 425. His cold manner and strong passions, 426. His friendship for Bentinck, 427. His letters, 428. His relations with the Princess Mary, 431, 437. (See Burnet.) His relations with English parties, 438. His feelings towards England, 439. His love for Holland, 440. His determined hostility to France, 440, 441. His religious fatalism, 442. His European policy, 444. His policy towards England, 445, 446. His conduct to Monmouth, 447. Becomes the head of the English opposition, 449. Rejects Mordaunt's project of an invasion, 450. Condemns the Declaration of Indulgence, 493. His remonstrance to James II., 495. His views respecting English Papists, 502. His correspondence with English statesmen, 521. His disputes with James, 522. Declares his opinions with regard to the Roman Catholics, 525. Sends to congratulate James on the birth of his son, iii. 102. His conversation with Edward Russell, 140. Receives invitation from the conspirators, 147. Difficult enterprise, 149, 150. His views, 153. His rediffere

 tary ceiv
 His
 the 194.
 leav
 Sets
 stor
 Eng
 Arr
 ing,
 wea givi
 226 troc
 com of p
 His ter, Sali
 his com
 His
 to ras:
 316 occu
 St. posi mer rille ceiv
 Of ven orde
 Sur
 356
 of 391 ven
 401 and feel cul for
 —
 H
 50

WYMOUTH

- Weymouth, Thomas Thynne, Viscount, receives Bishop Ken at Longleat, vi. 42
- Wharton, Godwin, vii. 411
- Wharton, Henry, ii. 364
- Wharton, Philip, Lord, iii. 336. His speech against the Abjuration Bill, v. 205
- Wharton, Thomas (afterwards Lord), elected for Buckinghamshire, ii. 54. His opposition to James II.'s Government, ii. 283. Writer of "Lillibulero," iii. 169. Joins the Prince of Orange, 239. His early life, vii. 80. His profligacy, 81. His zeal for the Whig party, 82. His electioneering skill, 83. His duels, 84. Attacks the corruption of the Tory ministers, 176. Chairman of the Committee of the two Houses, 182. Moves the impeachment of the Duke of Leeds, 185. Supports the Bill for Fenwick's attainder, 393. Made Chief Justice in Eyre, 411. Disappointed of the Secretaryship of State, viii. 19. His electioneering defeats in 1698, 126. His duel with Viscount Cheyney, 234. Joins in the resistance of the Peers to the Resumption Bill, 268. Recovers his influence in Buckinghamshire, 295
- Whig; origin of the term, i. 267
- Whigs; their efforts to pass the Exclusion Bill, i. 258, 269, 271. Re-action against, 272, 273. Persecution of, 274. Their plots, 277. Severe measures against, 278, 279. Their struggle at the election of 1685, ii. 53. Their weakness in Parliament, 87, 93. Whig Refugees on the Continent, 100, 102, 109. Their correspondence with England, 101. Support Monmouth, 113. Assemble at Amsterdam, 118. Their plan of action, 120. The leaders of the party keep aloof from Monmouth, 168. Plan of the Whig party for filling the throne by election, iii. 362, 364. Their temper after the Revolution, iv. 11. Their principles in regard to oaths of allegiance, v. 74. Their triumph over the High Churchmen,

WILLIAM I.

75. Their vindictive measures, 138. Their design upon the corporations, 145. Defeated therein, 151. Oppose the King's going to Ireland, 160. Their violence restrained by William III., 163. Their discontent, 183. Their general fidelity; treason of a few, 184. Their tactics in the Parliament of 1690, 198, 199. Propose the Abjuration Bill, 201. Their want of liberality towards the Irish, vi. 120, and notes. Subsequent change in their sentiments, 122. Support William's foreign policy, vii. 68. Their Parliamentary strength and organisation, 70. Chiefs of their party, 70—84. Their feelings in regard to Fenwick's confession, 368. Division in their party on the question of disbanding the army, viii. 7. Success of their administration, 122. Unpopularity of, in 1698, 123. Evils caused by their retention of office after Parliamentary defeats, 162, 163
- Whitby, Dr. Daniel, i. 344
- White. See Albeville, Marquess of
- White, Bishop of Peterborough, iii. 83. (See Bishops, the Seven.) Summoned by James II. to a conference, 232. A nonjuror, v. 78. Attends Fenwick on the scaffold, vii. 404
- Whitefriars (Alsatia), i. 377. Privileges of, vii. 408. The privileges abolished, 410
- Whitehall, Court of, i. 388. The palace burnt down, viii. 66
- Whitgift, Archbishop, i. 81
- Whitney, James, a highwayman; his capture and trial, vi. 306. Executed, 307
- Wicklow, anarchy in, iv. 163
- Wight, Isle of, English, Dutch, and French fleets off, v. 226
- Wildman, John; his character, ii. 101. Deceives Monmouth, 122. His cowardice, 169. Joins William at the Hague, iii. 196. His violent proposals, 200. Made Postmaster General, iv. 27
- Wilkes, John, constancy of the populace to, ii. 210
- William I., Prince of Orange, i. 225.

WILLIAM III.

treason, 169. Adjourns Parliament, 186. His use of the Veto on parliamentary bills, 186. His peculiar situation, 187. Negatives the Bill for Judges' Salaries, 189. Signs the order against the Macdonalds of Glencoe, 211. Goes to the Continent, 224—264. His difficulties, caused by the conduct of the Northern powers, 265. By the change of Pope, 267. By the conduct of his allies, 268—271. His exertions to maintain the coalition, 272—274. Declines the Governorship of the Spanish Netherlands, 275. His attempts to relieve Namur, 279. Attacks Luxemburg at Steinkirk, 287. Defeated, 291. Plot for his assassination, 293. Returns to England, 297. His measures to put down highway robberies, 306. His speech to Parliament, 308. Conciliates the Peers, 309. Consults Sir W. Temple, 381. His interview with Swift, 383. Negatives the Triennial Bill, and prorogues Parliament, 384. His ministerial arrangements, 384—386. Goes to Holland, 387. The French statesmen's opinions of him, vii. 21. Prepares for the campaign of 1693, 22. Collects his forces near Louvain, 24. Deceived by Luxemburg, 27. His position at Landen, 27. His defeat, 30. His conduct in covering the retreat, 31. His energy in repairing his loss, 35. Returns to England, 51. His complaints of the caprice of the House of Commons, 58. Sunderland's advice to him, 62. Appoints Whig ministers, 95. Negatives the Place Bill, 106. Prorogues Parliament, 129. His interview with Shrewsbury, 130. His plan for the campaign of 1694, 134. Rejects Marlborough's offer of his services, 139. His campaign of 1694, 142. His return to England; speech to Parliament, 150. Grants a pension to Tillotson's widow, 151. Consents to the Triennial Bill, 154. His agency at the death of Mary II., 154. Appoints Lord Somers Chancellor, 155. Reconstitutes the Council, 155.

WILLIAM III.

193. Directs inquiry into the case of Glencoe, 201. Dies, 201. John Dalrymple, 209. campaign of 1695, 212. I mur, 215. Gains possession of town, 215. Besieges the castle, 225. Returns to the castle, 225. Returns to the castle, 225. Dissolves Parliament, 237. Dissolves Parliament, 237. The Princess Anne, 237. progress through the country, 238. At Alton, 238. At Stamford, and Burleigh, 240. At coln, Welbeck, 241. At Warwick, Burford, 242. A returns to London, 243. E on opening Parliament, 243. vexation at the proceeding his grant to Portland, 278. I to Parliament on the disallowance of assassination plot, 298. Neg Bill for regulating Elections, 300. Promotes the Land Bank, 300. Joins the army in Flanders, 300. His difficulty in provisioning the army, 333. Receives Fenwick's letter, 352. His letter to Shrewsbury, 352. Effect of his letter, 355. I England, 356. His speech to Parliament, 359. Examines Fenwick's letter, 359. Closes the Session of Parliament, 359. Goes to the Continent, 359. night march to Brusseghe, 359. to accept terms of peace, 359. Sends Portland to Boufflers, 359. demands upon Lewis XIV., 359. return, and entry into London, 359. Difficulties of his situation, 359. Treaty of Ryswick, viii. 3. Session of Parliament, 16. liament well affected to him. grants of Crown lands to his favourites, 33. His speech to Parliament in 1698, 33. unwillingness to rebuild the city, 68. His intercourse with Peter, 75. His conciliatory policy, 81. His political views, 81. the appointments of the council, 81. France under Portland, 84. instructions on the subject of

WILLIAM III.

at Kensington Court, 60. His foreign favourites, 61. Suffers from his predecessors' maladministration, 63, 64. And from the dissensions of his ministers, 65—69. His administration of the Foreign Office, 70, 71. His ecclesiastical policy, 77. Attempts to compromise between the Church and Dissenters, 111. His coronation, 122. Proclaims war against France, 131. His inability to send troops to Ireland, 154. Negotiates with Tyrconnel, 155. His letter to the inhabitants of Londonderry, 248. Summons a Convention for Scotland, 258. His vexation at the outrages on the Scotch clergy, 261. His impartiality in regard to Church government, 270. His reply to Scotch Episcopalians, 271. His letter to the Scotch Convention, 273. His instructions to his agents in Scotland, 276. Sends a force to Edinburgh, 295. Proclaimed king in Scotland, 298. Accepts the crown of Scotland, 303. Refuses to pledge himself to religious persecution, 304. Disliked by the Covenanters, 305. His ministers for Scotland, 307. Becomes unpopular with the Whigs, v. 28. Naval affairs under him, 57. His continental policy, 60. Negotiations with the Dutch, 60. Appoints the Ecclesiastical Commission, 96. His unpopularity with the clergy, 104. Refuses to touch for the king's evil, 107. His message to Convocation, 118. Recommends the Indemnity Bill, 138. Disgusted with his position, 157. Purposes to retire to Holland, 158. Changes his intention, and resolves to go to Ireland, 159. Prorogues Parliament, 161. His indulgence to non-jurors, 164. Makes changes in his government, 166. His scruples against employing bribery, 175. Compelled to adopt it, 177. General Fast for his departure, 182. His speech to the new Parliament, 186. His dislike of the Adjuration Bill, 204. Submits to Parliament the Act of Grace, 206. Puts an end to political proscriptions,

WILLIAM III.

209. Prorogues Parliament, 210. His preparations for the war, 211. His difficulties, 225. Appoints the Council of Nine, 229. Sets out for Ireland, 232. Affronts Prince George of Denmark; sets sail from Chester, 233. Lands at Carrickfergus, 247. At Belfast, 248. His military arrangements, 250. His donation to Presbyterian ministers; his affability to his soldiers, 251. Marches southwards, 251. His army, 256—258. Reconnoitres the enemy, 259. Wounded, 261. Passes the Boyne, 266. His conduct in the battle, 266. His entry into Dublin, 276. His reported death, 277. His lenity censured, 279. Receives news of the battle of Beachy Head, 295. Takes Waterford, 296. Arrives before Limerick, 302. Loses his artillery, 304. Assaults the town; repulsed, 309. Raises the siege, 309. Returns to England, 311. His reception, 312. Sends Melville to Scotland as Lord High Commissioner, 321. His government obtains a majority in the Scotch Parliament, 322. Dissatisfied with the settlement of the Scotch Church, 343. His letter to the General Assembly, 344. Opens Parliament, 347. Departs for Holland, 365. His voyage to Holland, vi. 1. His danger; lands, and proceeds to the Hague, 2. His enthusiastic reception, 4. His speech to the Congress, 8. His administration of foreign affairs, 9—11. His relations with Roman Catholic princes; obtains toleration for the Waldenses, 12. His difficulties arising from the nature of a coalition, 13. His attempt to relieve Mons, 15. Returns to England, 16. His clemency to Jacobite conspirators, 22. Treason among his courtiers, 54. Returns to the Continent, 65. His indecisive campaign in Flanders, 66. Fine gentlemen in his camp, 67. Returns to England; opens Parliament; favourable prospects, 123. His speech, 124. His employment of Dutchmen, 165. Receives information of Marlborough's

WURTEMBERG

Justice by James II., iii. 6. Commissioner at Oxford on the affairs of Magdalene College, 33. Consulted by James, 74. Presides at the trial of the bishops, 110. Overawed by the general feeling, 115. His summing up, 119. Retains his post, 156
 Wurtemberg, Charles Frederick, Duke of, v. 257, 313. Joins Ginkell's army in Ireland, vi. 83. Volunteers to force the passage of the Shannon at Athlone, 89
 Wycherley, William, ii. 454
 Wycliffe, i. 20

YARMOUTH, changes of magistrates at, iii. 70

Yarmouth, Earl of, iii. 63

Yeomanry, under Charles II.; their influence and sentiments, i. 347

York, i. 352. Archbishopric of, ii. 343. Archbishopal province of, v. 110

YORKSHIRE

York, Council of, i. 93. Abolished, 101

York, Duchess of (Ann Hyde); death, i. 218

York, James, Duke of. See James
 Young, Robert, his villainous character and adventures, vi. 253, 254. For a paper in proof of a Jacobite, 255. Gives information to the Privy Council, 256. His detection of impudent conduct, 261. His subsequent career, 262, 263

ZULESTEIN; sent by the Prince of Orange to England, ii. 521. Congratulatory mission on the birth of the Prince of Wales, iii. 1. Sent to James II. at Rochester, i. His interview with James at Whitehall, 320. Appointed Master of Robes, iv. 25. Accompanies William III. to Holland, vi. 1

THE END

LONDON

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO.

NEW-STREET SQUARE

LIST OF WORKS BY LORD MACAULAY.

THE HISTORY of ENGLAND from the Accession of James the Second. By the Right Hon. Lord MACAULAY. Library Edition, in Five Volumes. 5 vols. 8vo. price £4.

LORD MACAULAY'S HISTORY of ENGLAND from the Accession of James the Second. New Edition of the Five Volumes, as above, revised and corrected; with Portrait and Memoir.. 8 vols. post 8vo. 48s.

CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS contributed to the Edinburgh Review. By the Right Honourable Lord MACAULAY. Library Edition, being the Tenth 3 vols. 8vo. 36s.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS. Traveller's Edition, complete in One Volume, with Portrait and Vignette..... Square crown 8vo. 21s. cloth; calf, by HAYDAY, 30s.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS contributed to the Edinburgh Review. An Edition in Volumes for the Pocket 3 vols. fcp. 8vo. price 21s.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL and HISTORICAL ESSAYS contributed to the Edinburgh Review. People's Edition, complete in 2 vols. crown 8vo. price 8s. cloth; or in 7 Parts, price One Shilling each.

LIST of Fourteen of Lord MACAULAY'S ESSAYS which may be had separately, in 16mo. in the TRAVELLER'S LIBRARY:—

Warren Hastings	1s.	Lord Byron; and the Comic Dramatists
Lord Clive	1s.	of the Restoration	1s.
William Pitt; and the Earl of Chatham	1s.	Frederick the Great	1s.
Bankes's History of the Popes; and Glad-		Hallam's Constitutional History of Eng-
stone on Church and State.....	1s.	land	1s.
Life and Writings of Addison; & Horace		Croker's Edition of Boswell's Life of Walpole	1s.	Johnson	1s.
Lord Bacon	1s.

MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS of Lord MACAULAY; comprising his Contributions to Knight's Quarterly Magazine, Articles from the Edinburgh Review not included in his Critical and Historical Essays, Biographies from the Encyclopædia Britannica, Miscellaneous Poems and Inscriptions. With Portrait 2 vols. 8vo. 21s.

LORD MACAULAY'S LAYS of ANCIENT ROME, with IVRY and the ARMADA. New Edition, with a Vignette from a Design by G. SCHARF, F.S.A..... 16mo. 4s. 6d. cloth; mor. by HAYDAY, 10s. 6d.

LAYS of ANCIENT ROME. By the Right Hon. Lord MACAULAY. With Woodcut Illustrations, original and from the Antique, by GEORGE SCHARF, F.S.A... Fcp. 4to. 21s.; morocco by HAYDAY, 42s.

LORD MACAULAY'S SPEECHES on PARLIAMENTARY REFORM in 1831 and 1832. Reprinted in the TRAVELLER'S LIBRARY 16mo. price 1s.

SPEECHES of the Right Hon. Lord MACAULAY, corrected by HIMSELF. New Edition 8vo. price 12s.

London: LONGMAN, GREEN, LONGMAN, and ROBERTS.

LORD MACAULAY'S MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS.

Lately published, in 3 vols. 8vo. with a Portrait on Steel, from a Photograph by CLAUDET, price 2ls.

THE MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS OF LORD MACAULAY:

COMPRISING HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO KNIGHT'S QUARTERLY MAGAZINE, ARTICLES CONTRIBUTED TO THE EDINBURGH REVIEW NOT INCLUDED IN HIS CRITICAL AND HISTORICAL ESSAYS, BIOGRAPHIES WRITTEN FOR THE ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, MISCELLANEOUS POEMS AND INSCRIPTIONS.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO KNIGHT'S QUARTERLY MAGAZINE.

FRAGMENTS OF A ROMAN TALE. (June 1833)
ON THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE. (June 1833)
SONNETS FROM ATHENIAN REVELS. (Jan. 1834)
CRITICISMS OF THE PRINCIPAL ITALIAN WRITERS. NO. I. DANTE. (Jan. 1834)
CRITICISMS OF THE PRINCIPAL ITALIAN WRITERS. NO. II. PETRARCH. (April 1834)
SOME ACCOUNT OF THE GREAT LAWSUITS BETWEEN THE PARISH OF ST. DENNIS AND ST. GEORGE IN THE WATER. (April 1834)

A CONVERSATION BETWEEN MR. ABRAHAM COWLEY AND MR. JOHN MITFORD TOUCHING THE GREAT CIVIL WAR. (August 1834)
ON THE ATHENIAN ORATORS. (August 1834)
A PROPHECIC ACCOUNT OF A GRAND NATIONAL EPIC POEM TO BE REVISED BY THE WELLSHEADIAN, AND TO BE PUBLISHED A.D. 1834. (Nov. 1834)
ON MITFORD'S HISTORY OF GERMANY. (Nov. 1834)

ESSAYS FROM THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

JOHN DRYDEN. (January 1832)
HISTORY. (May 1832)
MILL ON GOVERNMENT. (March 1833)
WESTMINSTER REVIEWER'S DEFENCE OF MILL. (June 1833)
UTILITARIAN THEORY OF GOVERNMENT. (October 1833)

SADLER'S LAW OF POPULATION. (July 1831)
SADLER'S REFUTATION REFUTED. (Jan. 1831)
MIRABEAU. (July 1832)
BARRER. (April 1844)

BIOGRAPHIES FROM THE ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA.

FRANCIS ATTERBURY. (December 1833)
JOHN BUNYAN. (May 1834)
OLIVER GOLDSMITH. (February 1836)

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (December 1836)
WILLIAM PITT. January 1839

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS, INSCRIPTIONS, ETC.

EPIGRAPH ON HENRY MARTIN. (1812)
LINES TO THE MEMORY OF PITT. (1813)
A RADICAL WAR SONG. (1830)
THE BATTLE OF MONCONTOUR. (1824)
THE BATTLE OF NASSBY, BY OBADIAH BIND-THIRK-KINGS-IN-CHAINS-AND-THIRK-NOBLES-WITH-LINKS-OF-IRON. SERJEANT IN IRETON'S REGIMENT. (1824)
SERMON IN A CHURCHYARD. (1825)
TRANSLATION OF A POEM BY ARNAULD. (1825)
DIES IRE. (1826)
THE MARRIAGE OF TIRZAH AND AHIRAD. (1827)
THE COUNTRY CLEERGYMAN'S TRIP TO CAMBRIDGE. AN ELECTION BALLAD. (1827)

SONG. (1827)
POLITICAL GEORGICS. (March 1833)
THE DELIVERANCE OF VIENNA. (1833)
THE LAST BUCCANNER. (1839)
EPIGRAPH ON A JACOBITE. (1848)
LINES WRITTEN IN AUGUST, 1847
TRANSLATION FROM PLAUTUS. (1839)
PARAPHRASE OF A PASSAGE IN THE CHRONICLE OF THE MONK OF ST. GALL. (1846)
INSCRIPTION ON THE STATUE OF LORD WM. BENTINCK, AT CALCUTTA. (1835)
EPIGRAPH ON SIR BENJAMIN HEATH MALIKIN, AT CALCUTTA. (1837)
EPIGRAPH ON LORD METCALFE. (1847)

London: LONGMAN, GREEN, LONGMAN, and ROBERTS.

